

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

---

THE official correspondence of the secretary to the admiralty during Pepys's tenure of that office is preserved in the Pepysian Library in fourteen volumes, entitled S. P.'s Letters, Admiralty. The series opens with vol. ii. and ends with vol. xv., but it is complete in itself, beginning with 19 June, 1673, the day on which Pepys took over the duties of his office, to which he had been called from the navy board on the Duke of York's resignation under the Test Act.<sup>1</sup> The contents of vol. i., which does not appear to have been included in the series marked 'Admiralty,' are at present only a matter of conjecture; it is not in the Pepysian Library. These fourteen volumes constitute the letter-book of Pepys's office, and are the seventeenth-century equivalent of a modern letter-copying book. They appear to include all the letters written by Pepys himself on matters relating to the business of his department, and at first some of the orders and warrants signed by the members of the admiralty commission are included also, but these disappear after the end of vol. ii., presumably because they came to be entered in a separate book.

The letters calendared below are those included in vols. ii. and iii. of the manuscript series, which cover the ground from 19 June, 1673, to 31 December, 1674. A large number of them, as would naturally be the case, refer only to matters of routine, such as arrangements for convoy and orders directing the movements of the ships in commission, but many are of interest and a few of considerable importance; while the letter-book taken as a whole throws a good deal of light on the way in which the navy was administered during the period, and on the kind of business transacted in the office of the secretary to the admiralty. The letters are usually entered in the manuscript volumes by the clerks in order of date, as they were sent out, but where this is not the case they have been rearranged in the printed calendar. In a few instances they are printed in full; in others extracts have been given; but, as a rule, it has been found possible to give the sense of the letters in a condensed form. This condensation aims only at getting rid of the inevitable verbiage of correspondence, and the Editor ventures to claim that nothing of any conceivable value to the student has been omitted. The language of the original has been closely followed in all cases, and, with a few unimportant exceptions, all proper names have been included. An index of persons, places, and ships will be given at the end of each volume; while an attempt has been made to minimise the disadvantage of the absence for the time being of an index of subjects, by the use of cross-references in the text of the letters themselves.

The importance of the Pepysian papers as a whole, has been fully discussed in the General Introduction.<sup>1</sup> The letters printed below furnish additional evidence in support of the conclusions there suggested, and it has been thought convenient to adopt somewhat the same arrangement in dealing with them. The points of interest in the present volume are therefore indicated under the following heads : (1) Administration ; (2) Finance ; (3) Men ; (4) Pay ; (5) Victuals ; (6) Discipline ; (7) Ships ; and (8) Miscellaneous.

I. Administration<sup>1</sup>

The sittings of the new admiralty commission<sup>2</sup> were opened 19 July, 1673, and their public meetings were fixed for Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at the Council Chamber, at 8 o'clock in the morning.<sup>3</sup> During the first six months the most regular attendant was the Earl of Anglesey, who was present at 73 meetings. Next to him came Sir George Carteret with 59 attendances, the Duke of Ormonde with 48, the Earl of Arlington with 42, and Henry Coventry with 40. Edward Seymour attended 30 times, but the other members of the commission took only a nominal part in its proceedings. Shaftesbury and Latimer<sup>4</sup> appear to have attended ten times, Prince Rupert seven times, and the Duke of Monmouth only thrice. The office of the admiralty was at first at Whitehall, but towards the close of the year 1673 a new office was being furnished at Derby House,<sup>5</sup> and the first letter written from thence was dated 3 January, 1673-4.<sup>6</sup>

The numerous orders and warrants from the lords of the admiralty included in the first six months of the calendar, show that the new commission exhibited from the beginning of its existence a considerable degree of administrative energy. For instance, an order of 3 September, 1673,<sup>7</sup> required, among other things, that a register of discharged seamen should be made by the officer presiding at the pay-table, who should take notice in writing of the abode of each man, 'for the more ready recovering of the said seamen when his Majesty shall next call for their service.' On 6 September<sup>1</sup> it was ordered that for security against fraud in the passing of tickets, the muster-masters and clerks of the check should send duplicates of their books to the treasurer of the navy—a duty hitherto 'wholly omitted' by them; and another order of 15 September<sup>2</sup> established a better supervision over the clerks of the control and the master shipwrights in the yards, with periodical reports to the admiralty from the navy board. On 20 September<sup>3</sup> an order was issued to the commissioners for the sick and wounded<sup>4</sup> requiring them 'to establish effectual methods to their officers in the several districts and hospitals,' and 'by virtue thereof' to make a weekly return to the lords of 'the state of their whole action,' digested under certain specified heads 'for their readier view and information.' Moreover, in order to put a stop to the abuse by which sick seamen who had been put ashore were borne and paid for on shipboard also at the same time, a special official was appointed to arrange and digest the accounts of the commissioners for the sick and wounded into such order, 'either by an alphabet or otherwise,' as to enable the navy board to check the ships' books by them before proceeding to pay off. The lords also required that the navy board should see that the admiral's instructions had been duly observed before officers received their pay,<sup>5</sup> and should report their neglects;<sup>6</sup> and they called for a report on the conduct of the muster-masters of the fleet during the summer's service, with a view to the promotion of the prompt and efficient.<sup>7</sup> Such facts as these all point to the introduction of a bracing and beneficent influence into naval affairs.

When the office of lord high admiral was placed in commission in July 1673, a great part of the functions of the office was retained in the hands of the king,<sup>1</sup> and in particular the administration of patronage was so retained. In a letter of 26 March, 1673-4,<sup>2</sup> Pepys informs his correspondent that the disposal of employments is wholly his Majesty's, his own share in the business being 'only to present to him the certificates by which persons recommended for employments are to have their different qualifications and merits made known to him.' In a later letter of 26 September<sup>3</sup> he calls himself the 'king's remembrancer,' and claims to have discharged this important office 'no less in behalf of the absent than those that are daily soliciting, as you will find by the majority of those whom his Majesty hath been pleased of late to bestow employments upon, showing that not the importunity of those who daily solicit him, but his regard to the qualifications of the persons, upon the view of the list of pretenders by me shown him upon occasion of every vacancy, hath governed him in his choice.' It is, of course, quite possible that Charles II. allowed himself to be largely guided by his expert adviser, and in any case the office of 'king's remembrancer' in these matters must have been an influential one; but the evidence all goes to show that the details of patronage actually came before the king, and that he had the fullest opportunity of making himself felt. Indeed, it would be somewhat gratuitous to suppose that because Charles II. loved sauntering, the frequent intrusion of his keen intelligence upon the routine of the navy would be entirely without result.<sup>4</sup> The king appointed all commanders and commissioned officers as a matter of course, although in one or two cases<sup>5</sup> a commander was allowed to nominate his own lieutenant, receiving either a blank commission beforehand or the king's approval afterwards. But the king's personal control was not limited to officers holding by commission. Pepys undertakes to recommend a particular person as purser of the Adventure, but he can do no more than 'move his Majesty' in that behalf.<sup>1</sup> The nomination of a boatswain and a carpenter for the Europa hulk at Tangier was left to the navy board,<sup>2</sup> but the approval of the king was asked for at the final stage of the proceedings.<sup>3</sup> The king's warrant was required for a carpenter for the Emsworth sloop,<sup>4</sup> and for the galley at Leghorn;<sup>5</sup> and he signed the warrant for the 'dismission' of the inefficient boatswain of the Oxford and for appointing another in his room.<sup>6</sup> In May 1674 he was 'moved' for the appointment of another cook to the Norwich.<sup>7</sup> In other business also the personal note is now and again clearly in evidence.<sup>8</sup>

James, Duke of York, also, though expelled from office by the Test Act, remained from the first an important influence behind the throne. On 9 August, 1673,<sup>9</sup> not two months after his resignation, and again on 23 August,<sup>10</sup> Pepys describes the king as acting in particular matters upon the duke's advice. On 24 October<sup>11</sup> he instructs the navy board to report on 'a proposal of his Royal Highness's for bringing into some better order the great number of tenders which, to the extraordinary increase of charge, the fleet have of late been accompanied with.' The duke's recommendation of a master for the Castle frigate<sup>12</sup> is not necessarily important in this connexion, as she was not a king's ship; but he evidently has something to say about the appointment of Captain Waltham to the command of the Deptford ketch;<sup>13</sup> and when the office of clerk of the passage at Dover is on the eve of becoming vacant, Pepys writes to Sir John Werden, the duke's secretary, 'to move his Royal Highness to prevail on the king' to bestow it on a person in whom he was interested.<sup>1</sup> On 29 September, 1674,<sup>2</sup> when he was on the eve of sailing for the Mediterranean, Sir John Narbrough was summoned to confer with 'his Majesty and Royal Highness' at Newmarket; and Pepys himself, repairing to Windsor on 23 June<sup>3</sup> to refer some admiralty question to the king, and finding him gone 'somewhere for his pleasure,' discusses not only that but another pending naval question also with the duke, and quotes his opinion to his correspondents. On 3 October, 1674,<sup>4</sup> Pepys sends him, through Sir John Werden, 'the fresh estate of our sea matters.' If it is borne in mind that these allusions to the figure of the displaced duke as still in the background of naval affairs are not deliberate, but casual and accidental only, they afford a strong presumption that the king still consulted his brother although he was no longer in office. Moreover, the duke was an expert whose opinion was well worth having, so it would be entirely natural that his influence in the navy should thus in a manner survive the measures that had been taken to destroy it.<sup>5</sup>

The letters calendared in this volume contain numerous allusions to the current events of the period which they cover. A statement made by Pepys ten days after the action of 11 August, 1673, recalls the earlier condition of things when the Dutch came up the Medway,<sup>6</sup> for he is troubled to find that De Ruyter, who, as he hears, 'hath not full 600 men,' 'should have 200 of them made up of our countrymen and Scotch.'<sup>7</sup> In the same letter he regrets that the late engagement had been attended with 'disagreements among ourselves, and between us and our friends the French.' Subsequent letters describe the steps to be taken for refitting the fleet,<sup>1</sup> and for discharging the vessels collected for the transport of the projected land expedition, which was now abandoned.<sup>2</sup>

One result of the war with Holland was an increased interference with trade by means of privateering.<sup>3</sup> The western coast was 'much infested,'<sup>4</sup> and the same story came from the north, where forty or fifty sail of colliers coming out without convoy were chased on shore.<sup>5</sup> On 20 August, 1673,<sup>6</sup> the lords applied to Prince Rupert for five or six of the smallest and best-sailing frigates out of the fleet to secure the rich East India ships on their way from Kinsale, and the Virginia fleet 'daily expected,' and to provide 'timely convoy' for the Yarmouth fishery. At the beginning of December<sup>7</sup> reports were received of 'capers upon the coast of Portugal, threatening the Mediterranean trade. Relations with Spain gave the English government some anxiety,<sup>8</sup> as also the reported force of the Dutch upon the Spanish and Portuguese coasts.<sup>9</sup> In January 1673-4 it was found necessary to strengthen the force employed in convoying the London coal trade,<sup>10</sup> and after the peace with the Dutch there was still trouble with the French and Ostenders.<sup>11</sup> As late as July 1674 convoys were being employed to secure the merchants from the 'insolencies of the privateers.'<sup>12</sup>

The existence of war conditions during 1673 made it necessary for the government to establish a systematic organisation for the convoy of the Mediterranean trade, and the official programme for the autumn of that year is to be found in an order from the lords of the admiralty to the navy board, dated 8 October.<sup>13</sup> But the delays of the merchants on the one hand<sup>14</sup> and of the navy on the other<sup>15</sup> interfered to prevent the smooth working of these arrangements, and the convoys were very much behind time. Thus, on 11 December, 1673,<sup>1</sup> Pepys complains of the 'intolerable backwardness' of the Tangier victualling ships; and as late as 5 February they had not been despatched, so that it was feared that the garrison would be in distress for want of victuals.<sup>2</sup> According to the programme, Captain Rooth's ships which were to convoy them should have been ready at the buoy of the Nore on 25 October, 1673;<sup>3</sup> as a matter of fact it was not until 14 February, 1673-4, that Pepys was able to congratulate the governor on the fact that they are at length sailed from Plymouth.<sup>4</sup> In spite of these drawbacks, the anxiety of the government to assist the merchants is very much in evidence in the correspondence, 'there being nothing,' as Pepys put it, which the king and the lords of the admiralty 'study more than that those ships of the king's which are abroad may in their service be found as beneficial to trade as they may: nor is there anything that I shall in my little sphere be more solicitous of improving.'<sup>5</sup>

The first reference in the letters to the conclusion of the war with Holland is dated 10 February, 1673-4.<sup>6</sup> Peace was actually declared on 28 February, and it was provided that hostilities should cease within twelve days in the Channel,<sup>7</sup> although they continued between the Soundings and Tangier until 7 April.<sup>8</sup> The government was anxious to utilise the interval for the capture of prizes;<sup>9</sup> and as it was not to be supposed that the Dutch would be any less alive to their opportunities, the merchants were apprehensive lest their ships expected from the plantations should be 'snapt' before they got into the Soundings.<sup>10</sup> The danger was only to ships homeward bound, as by agreement with the Prince of

Orange, merchant ships bound out after the proclamation of peace were to carry passes for their protection from the privateers.<sup>1</sup> It was provided by the treaty that English subjects should be withdrawn from Surinam,<sup>2</sup> and the correspondence contains references to the arrangements made by the naval authorities for removing them.<sup>3</sup>

Among the letters calendared in this volume are some of considerable interest relating to affairs in the Mediterranean. It was a principle of English policy there that English ships of war should make impressive appearances before the African ports as often as might be,<sup>4</sup> and in August 1674 the Bristol and the Drake were assigned to ply before Sallee ;<sup>5</sup> while about the same time Pepys applied for authority for Captain Herbert, then commander-in-chief in the Straits, to confirm the late articles of peace with Tripoli,<sup>6</sup> a step rendered necessary by the death of the governor. The most important part of the correspondence, however, is a series of letters<sup>7</sup> referring to the origin of Sir John Narbrough's expedition of 1674 to the Mediterranean. These prove that in its intention it was pacific, and only assumed a punitive character in consequence of acts of aggression against English commerce.

2. Finance<sup>8</sup>

Almost from the time of its appointment, the admiralty commission of 1673 found itself short of money. In a letter of 13 August<sup>9</sup> the lords refer to the 'fresh instances' which they 'almost daily receive' of 'what his Majesty suffers in the delays (and in some cases total stop) of his works through the want of money.' The navy board had demanded a sum of 27,743*l.* to furnish materials for refitting the fleet after an engagement, and it was certain that further sums would be needed to provide for the sick and wounded, on whose account very large arrears had been incurred already. John Evelyn, who was one of the commissioners for the care of them, confessed to arrears of 'near 15,000*l.*' in his single district of Kent, and it was there that 'the greatest part of that fresh charge which is to be looked for at the coming in of the fleet is likely to fall.' It was these considerations which led the lords to become 'importunate' with the lord treasurer that some immediate provision might be made 'for answering both those occasions,' as 'that without which we have no ground of expecting his Majesty's service can be supported by us as it ought to be, and as his Majesty seems to expect, in either.'

From this time forward allusions to the shortness of money are frequent.<sup>1</sup> On 22 November, 1673,<sup>2</sup> in a letter to the navy board, Pepys refers to the inability of the victuallers to answer their late warrants without a supply of money, 'a matter which, if not instantly remedied, will turn extraordinary to the disservice of his Majesty, by causing a stop to the going forth of those ships to the Straits and elsewhere, which have already met with too many delays.' On 8 December<sup>3</sup> the lords of the admiralty wrote to the lord treasurer to call attention to the demands of the navy board for money in cases 'not only at present very urgent, but greatly importing to his Majesty's future service,'—namely, enabling the board to contract for the building of twelve fireships; the payment of arrears to the workmen of the yards; and 'satisfying the pursers<sup>4</sup> of the fleet now going to the Straits what the late victuallers refuse to make good to them for their beverage and necessary money.'<sup>5</sup> Some of the letters suggestively illustrate the costliness of poverty to the seventeenth-century navy.

Through the want of money to pay them off, ships remained in harbour undischarged in full victuals and wages;<sup>1</sup> and the governing consideration in the distribution of ships among the yards for repair was the necessity of providing more work for the men in the yard at Portsmouth, because it was not possible to dismiss them unpaid.<sup>2</sup>

Fortunately the close of the war brought opportunities of retrenchment,<sup>3</sup> and the number of persons employed, both at sea and in the yards,<sup>4</sup> was reduced, although the difficulties in the way of paying the workmen in cash made it necessary for steps to be considered for protecting them from the arrest by their creditors, to which they were liable as soon as they passed out of the king's service.<sup>5</sup> Nevertheless, on 17 March, 1673-4,<sup>6</sup> Pepys was able to write with an access of cheerfulness concerning the king's intentions, 'I find him so full of the thoughts he is now under of stopping of all things that look like occasions of laying out money, that I perceive he is more thoughtful of getting out of debt for what is past (wherein God bless his endeavours) than willing to entertain any proposition that may tend to the increasing of it'; and a month later—on 14 April<sup>7</sup>—he was able to report progress in reducing the 'growing charge' of the navy, 'in which, blessed be God, a good step hath been in a little time made by the paying off of so many ships.'

By the middle of the year<sup>8</sup> ordinary expenditure on the navy was once more being calculated at the 200,000*l.* a year to which it had been limited by the Order in Council of 16 March, 1668-9,<sup>9</sup> and although we know from a memorandum of 25 May, 1674,<sup>10</sup> that the victualling account was more than 30,000*l.* in arrears at that date, arrangements had been made for paying off the debt before the end of the year by monthly instalments.

3. Men<sup>1</sup>

As long as the war with Holland lasted there were constant complaints of the want of men.<sup>2</sup> At the fleet, in particular, as Pepys wrote on 3 July, 1673, 'his Majesty's occasions call greatly for the utmost supplies of men that can be had,'<sup>3</sup> although in a letter to one of the commanders<sup>4</sup> he stated it to be the opinion of the lords of the admiralty that 'were captains as careful as they ought in keeping their men, and using them well when they have them,' the service would not suffer so much by letting so many run away upon every ship's coming into port. There was also a great deficiency of ship carpenters and caulkers in the yards.<sup>5</sup>

Various measures were adopted to remedy this condition of things. By an Order in Council dated 19 November, 1673,<sup>6</sup> an embargo was laid upon all ships going to the Canaries, Barbados, or 'the western islands and plantations.' Men paid off from ships coming in were invited to ships going out,<sup>7</sup> and eventually it was provided on 24 December,<sup>8</sup> that the men lately ordered to be paid off should not be paid on board their own ships or at the office on shore, but only on the ships going out, 'that so their service for the present expedition may be secured.' An attempt had also been made at the beginning of 1673 to encourage seamen to volunteer by promising that at the end of the voyage those who did so should not be turned over to outward-bound ships.<sup>9</sup> But by far the most convenient machinery for supplying the deficiency was by the use of the press. Not only were press-warrants issued in great numbers to individual commanders to enable them to make up their own complements,<sup>1</sup> but various officials, such as the vice-admirals of maritime counties,<sup>2</sup> the Rulers of Watermen's Hall,<sup>3</sup> the bargemen on the Thames about Windsor, Henley, and Reading,<sup>4</sup> and the Governor of Dover Castle,<sup>5</sup> were entrusted with the duty of collecting and sending pressed men to the fleet. Captain Grant, commander of the Reserve, was sent on a special mission to Bristol to press men,<sup>6</sup> where he was baffled by some ingenious persons who endeavoured 'to preserve themselves from the press by pretence of being masters of ships while they indeed are not so';<sup>7</sup> and in January 1673-4 it was proposed by the navy board that agents should be employed at the ports 'for the impresting and collecting of men to be sent to the fleet when occasion requires,' in place of taking up vessels on purpose to enable commanders to press, which involved an 'extravagant charge.'<sup>8</sup> At the end of 1673 and the beginning of 1673-4 the needs of Chatham Yard were met by the press, and warrants were issued for the pressing of twenty carvers<sup>9</sup> and a number of caulkers and shipwrights.<sup>10</sup> When in August 1673<sup>11</sup> there was a difficulty in procuring pilots, the course was taken of requiring the Mayor of Harwich 'immediately to procure' two or three 'by impresting or otherwise,' or the Mayor of Southwold if Harwich could not furnish a supply.

The powers conferred by a press-warrant were of the most ample kind. By an explanatory order of the lords, dated 25 November, 1673,<sup>12</sup> it was laid down that 'officers employed for the impresting of seamen' were not restrained from pressing in any place 'where persons fit for the service of his Majesty are to be found'; but as a matter of fact a good deal of respect was paid in practice, at once to the feeling of the merchants, to the public opinion of the districts concerned, and to complaints in Parliament. On 19 September, 1673,<sup>1</sup> in enclosing a press-warrant, Pepys warned his correspondent that he must not be found 'unnecessarily spending of time in the impressing of men to the offence of the country.' On 6 January, 1673-4, an application from Sir William Jennens for a man out of every merchant ship in the Downs was refused—presumably as an interference with the navigation of outward-bound ships—it being 'what hath at no time been done, and the consequence of it may be ill'; he was therefore to 'rest upon what he may obtain by courtesy and argument,' and not to 'attempt anything by violence.'<sup>2</sup> Finally, the proceedings of Colonel Strode, the governor of Dover Castle, illustrate the influential position of Parliament in the period which followed the Restoration, and the irresistible pressure which it could bring to bear, even upon the details of administration, whenever it chose to interfere. Strode received in due course his warrant for pressing men, but 'upon some late dissatisfaction,' writes Pepys to Captain Rooth on 27 January, 1673-4,<sup>3</sup> 'which the Parliament hath expressed touching our method of pressing of men,' he declares 'that he will not proceed at all to the execution of the warrant till the business be settled in Parliament, as being unwilling to expose himself to any censure for his acting therein, which caution (to tell you the truth) prevails now with others as well as him, so that I must advise you and the commanders with you to take the best care you can in keeping and well using the men you have, for I dare not undertake in what time the business will be so settled as to leave it safe for us to go on with the pressing of men.'

The operation of the press must have been somewhat ameliorated in particular cases by the system of protections, and to this a great number of references occur in the letters calendared below. Persons in the king's service were of course exempt. A baker in the king's service was discharged, who was also 'a Dutchman born and no seaman';<sup>1</sup> as also protected persons pressed out of a Guildford barge when coming thence with timber for the use of Deptford Yard.<sup>2</sup> Pressing men out of vessels belonging to the victuallers was forbidden;<sup>3</sup> and a commander was called to account for pressing the watermen belonging to the clerk of the check at Gravesend.<sup>4</sup> Other protections granted before pressing or discharges allowed after it, were: to the four remaining members of the barge crew of the Archbishop of Canterbury;<sup>5</sup> the crew of a small vessel employed to bring stone from Portland for the public buildings of London;<sup>6</sup> a Spaniard;<sup>7</sup> a number of Swedes;<sup>8</sup> the son of a 'considerable merchant' at Dartmouth;<sup>9</sup> one of the crew of the Bahama Merchant, then at Plymouth, on the ground that she was 'a ship of value, and not yet come to her port of unlading';<sup>10</sup> five men belonging to the ferryboat of Grays;<sup>11</sup> men attached to the service of the packet-boats at Harwich,<sup>12</sup> and a man employed at Deal for collecting the duties for the lighthouse.<sup>13</sup> On a complaint from the Lord Mayor of a violation of the king's protection to a ship employed on the work of the City of London, a special inquiry was instituted, the disorder 'being that which his Majesty resolves in no wise to let pass without some mark of his displeasure against it.'<sup>14</sup> An anchorsmith imprested on board the Phoenix was discharged on the ground that anchorsmiths were greatly needed—presumably in the yards.<sup>15</sup> A porter carried off by the press was liberated on the adequate ground that he was 'aged and sickly and no seaman';<sup>16</sup>

but, generally speaking, the complaints of the pressing of unfit men, which had been so serious at the time of the second Dutch war,<sup>1</sup> were much less numerous in the period under review.<sup>2</sup> To prevent misunderstandings, protections appear to have been given wholesale to the crews of merchant ships actually engaged in outward-bound trade.<sup>3</sup> The violation of protections was promptly punished by the lords,<sup>4</sup> and there are at least two cases in which the use of violence led to the offender being summoned to make answer for his conduct.<sup>5</sup>

In spite of all limitations and exemptions, the use of the press was naturally most unpopular. When in January 1673-4 Pepys wished to ascertain the numbers of men on board the merchant ships collected for convoy in the Downs, he thought it expedient to disguise his inquiry by asking also for the number of guns they carried and the port to which each was bound;<sup>6</sup> and the naval administration of the time had to provide soldiers to repress the frequent disorders between the press masters and the seamen, who assembled themselves 'mutinously in bodies from day to day, not only to the interrupting but assaulting and wounding the said press masters in the execution of their duties.'<sup>7</sup> With the peace with Holland, however, these troubles came speedily to an end. Even before its actual publication, protections were granted to the men employed in the fitting forth of ships, 'that the merchant may not be disturbed in his preparations,'<sup>8</sup> and as soon as the war ended all press-warrants were refused by the king.<sup>9</sup>

Among minor points connected with pressing it should be noticed that an application to the king and lords for a warrant to impress men for the ballast work at Plymouth was commented on by Pepys as a novelty, 'forasmuch as with money they seem to need no presting, and without it I doubt what the consequence of this practice may be, I not remembering that ballast men have been at any time imprested as seamen are.'<sup>1</sup> It should also be observed that on the occasions when men were to be pressed within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, an order was first obtained from the king as lord warden.<sup>2</sup>

Several of the letters calendared below refer to the arrangements made for sick and wounded seamen during the war.<sup>3</sup> In consequence of 'the ill condition in which seamen are through wounds or sickness frequently sent on shore by their want of clothes,' an order of 21 July, 1673,<sup>4</sup> authorised commanders and pursers to supply seamen thus set ashore with clothes up to the value of one month's pay. At the same time it was provided that the sick should not be put ashore above Gravesend, but that the wounded should be carried up to the hospitals in London. But owing to the failure to pay them their arrears, the poor people upon whom the sick were quartered at Deal were unwilling to take any more, and this gave rise in January 1673-4 to a characteristic correspondence<sup>5</sup> between Pepys and his brother-in-law, Balthazar St. Michel, the muster-master there, who had undertaken duties in connexion with the sick against the advice of his wiser relative. The sympathies of Pepys himself appear to have been on the side of the householders, and he expressed a strong opinion against the use towards them of any violence, severity, or threats.

As regards employment on board ship, it appears to have been the king's practice to appoint to vacancies those who had been already employed, where they were fit for it,<sup>1</sup> and there are several instances of men who had lost a limb in the service being entered, on that ground, to serve on board the king's ships.<sup>2</sup> A novel reason was given for the appointment of a chaplain to the French Ruby—that it was 'for the satisfaction of the seamen, who neglect their duty . . . under pretence of going to divine service ashore for the want of a chaplain on board.'<sup>3</sup> Justice should also be done to the capacity for facing unpleasant facts displayed by the master of the Nonsuch, who was very 'importunate' to be discharged from the service, on the ground that he was 'very ancient' and 'much decayed in his judgment.'<sup>4</sup>

The defects of the ticket system have been discussed already in the General Introduction to vol. i. of this Catalogue;<sup>6</sup> of these the letters calendared below only furnish additional illustrations. An attempt had been made, by establishing a special official, and regular instructions for the better managing of the ticket office, to remove those delays and other grievances which 'to the great discouragement of seamen and dishonour to his Majesty's service,' they have 'heretofore been found very clamorous under.'<sup>7</sup> The navy board was also instructed by the lords of the admiralty to abandon the practice of 'splitting' ships' books and tickets—a practice first established when the moneys assigned to the navy were in their application limited to the service of particular years, and justified of late on the ground that it was important to keep the account of each year's expenses in sea-wages distinct.<sup>8</sup> It was now held that there was no advantage in this method to compensate for 'the manifold perplexities as well as troubles which indispensably attend it, both to the navy office and the many persons that are thereby driven to long and chargeable delays in the getting of their tickets passed and payments made.' But in spite of these improvements, the ticket system, at any rate where there was no adequate supply of money behind it, was thoroughly bad, leading as it did to inordinate delays and the absence of men from on board trying to get their tickets examined, passed, and paid ;<sup>1</sup> and we find Pepys on 10 March, 1673-4, expressing the vain desire in a letter to the navy board<sup>2</sup> that it might be possible 'to pay the poor seamen without being driven to any longer use of that fatal way of discharging them by ticket.'

The long arrears and the unsatisfactory character of the arrangements for satisfying them sometimes led to serious disorders among the seamen. In December 1673 there was a recrudescence of the old disturbances of the earlier part of the reign,<sup>3</sup> and a letter of 15 December<sup>4</sup> from the lords of the admiralty to the lord treasurer supports an application for a weekly sum of money to discharge the seamen's tickets by a reference to 'the disorder wherein the seamen concerned in the payment of their tickets at this time are, to the threatening the pulling down of his Majesty's office and the embezzlement or spoil of all the books and papers there, besides the yet more public effects thereof to the dishonour of his Majesty's service and discouragement of seamen against the next year.'

The letters calendared below contain references to the arrangements established during Charles II.'s reign for half-pay and pensions in the navy.<sup>5</sup> By an order of the lords, dated 30 July, 1673,<sup>6</sup> it was provided that the pensions of superannuated chirurgeons should be computed 'by taking in the twopences of the company of the greatest ship on which they have served,' 'according to the complement appointed for the said ship in time of peace for home service.' On 13 December, 1673,<sup>1</sup> two cases arose under the Order in Council of 6 December, 1672, for pensions on superannuation;<sup>2</sup> and on the same date<sup>3</sup> another case under the Order in Council of 6 June, 1673, providing for an extension of the same principle to officers wounded in service at sea.<sup>4</sup> On 10 December, 1673,<sup>5</sup> another Order in Council provided that masters of the first three rates should receive full pay for themselves and their servants during the present war, 'as well in ordinary as extraordinary,' provided that they and their servants gave 'their due and constant attendance on board.' On 15 November of the same year,<sup>6</sup> on a petition from some of the chaplains complaining of great delays in the receipt of their moneys arising from 'the method lately established' of paying them by the books, the lords of the admiralty authorised a reversion to the older practice of paying them by complements of men, since the chaplains expressed themselves as 'willing rather to forego the benefit intended them by the late alteration than be exposed to the greater inconveniencies arising from the delays attending the casting of the books.' On 2 December<sup>7</sup> a similar order was made in respect of the pay of chirurgeons.

The papers also throw some light on those additional payments to officers and men during the war which come under the head of prize-money and special gratuities. On 30 July, 1673,<sup>8</sup> a special gratuity of 10*l.* each was assigned to the company of the Pearl merchantman for good service in defending her against the enemy's men-of-war; and a similar sum was promised to the crew of the Katherine

5. Victuals<sup>3</sup>

The circumstances attending the change of victualling contractors which took place in November 1673, have been already discussed in the General Introduction;<sup>4</sup> the correspondence relating to it will be found among the papers calendared below.<sup>5</sup> The complaints against the victuallers during this period are in the main for delay,<sup>6</sup> accentuated by the confusion set up by the change of contractors;<sup>7</sup> complaints of bad victuals, although they occur,<sup>8</sup> are comparatively few in number. The delays were, no doubt, mainly due to shortness of money,<sup>9</sup> and the new contractors were better than the old probably because they had a larger capital behind them. There are also references to the separate contract of 1674 with Sir Thomas Clutterbuck for the Mediterranean.<sup>10</sup> Some interest attaches to a series of orders from the lords of the admiralty showing the modus operandi of a victualling declaration, and the subsequent distribution among the victualling ports of the victuals so provided;<sup>11</sup> to an order from the lords of 13 December, 1673,<sup>12</sup> that for the future ships called in to be laid up and paid off are to remain in sea victuals 'during the time the provisions

6. Discipline<sup>2</sup>

It is 'matter of much trouble,' wrote Pepys on 3 January, 1673-4,<sup>3</sup> 'to consider how all discipline and obedience seems at this day to be laid aside' ; and his official correspondence contains a good deal of evidence to suggest the magnitude of the task which lay before those who should attempt to re-establish discipline in the navy. We hear of 'complaints which daily arise' of the neglects of the king's commanders when they come into port in the 'despatching of their ships forth again' to sea ;<sup>4</sup> and of 'the easiness with which commanders are in foul weather induced to find a port.'<sup>5</sup> Closely associated with this, and often a cause of it, was the abuse of carrying merchants' goods on board the king's ships,<sup>6</sup> as a rule in collusion with and under temptation from the merchants themselves.<sup>7</sup> The king and the lords of the admiralty were very 'earnest' in their resolutions 'duly to punish a fault of such importance,'<sup>8</sup> and inquiries were set on foot in the Mediterranean ports with a view to the discovery and punishment of the offenders.<sup>9</sup> We hear also of a commander exacting money from the merchant ships to which he gave convoy, 'though not under the bare name of convoy-money, yet under another pretence, namely, for . . . giving them sailing orders, a practice newly crept into the navy';<sup>1</sup> and of breaches of the recent Order in Council of 30 July, 1673,<sup>2</sup> fixing one per cent. as the maximum charge for conveying money or plate.<sup>3</sup>

Another disciplinary difficulty was the absence of captains from their ships without leave. This was dealt with by means of the new regulations for mustering commanders described in the General Introduction,<sup>4</sup> and by an attempt to insist on leave of absence being obtained from the lords of the admiralty.<sup>5</sup> Pepys also complains of the inefficiency of the muster-masters with the fleet, who do not send up the accounts of their musters, 'without which neither can the manning of the fleet be ever rightly known, nor any of the abuses obviated that the king is exposed to by false musters or ratings';<sup>6</sup> of irregularities in the weekly returns from the clerks of the check in the several yards;<sup>7</sup> of the backwardness of the pursers to give in their books;<sup>8</sup> and of the want of respect shown by individual captains to the orders of their superior officers<sup>9</sup> — 'concerning which,' he writes on 6 January, 1673-4,<sup>10</sup> of one of these cases, 'I shall not fail to do my duty by the grace of God (whomsoever it offends) in laying it before his Majesty, so as that I hope our young commanders will see his Majesty will countenance no such breach of discipline.' It was in this spirit that the secretary of the admiralty set about the difficult task of creating a new tradition of naval discipline. The attempt did not succeed within his own period, but it is clear that it was honestly made, and there are a good many references in the official correspondence which show that in Pepys's time a good deal was being done to establish that steady pressure of authority in the direction of good conduct and obedience to orders, which was a preliminary condition of any sound system of discipline in the English navy.

During the eighteen months covered by the letters calendared in this volume, a considerable number of disciplinary dismissals from the service took place, either by court-martial or otherwise. The commander of the Guernsey was dismissed for pressing men out of the packet-boats at Harwich in spite of a protection ;<sup>1</sup> the commander of the Deptford ketch ran his ship upon a rock while attending the merchants' occasions contrary to orders, whereat the king was 'so moved' that he at once displaced him ;<sup>2</sup> while another commander was brought to a court-martial for carrying merchants' goods.<sup>3</sup> Two captains were deprived for cowardice ;<sup>4</sup> another for defrauding the king ;<sup>5</sup> and a third in consequence of complaints from his company, who formulated their grievances by means of a 'round robin.'<sup>6</sup> The counterpart of the modern inquiry into naval mishaps is to be found in the inquiry held by the navy board into the blowing up of the Anne and the sinking of the Hester fireship at Sheerness ;<sup>7</sup> the trial of Captain Nugent by court-martial for the 'miscarriage' of the Fairfax ;<sup>8</sup> and the decision to try the master of the Royal Charles for running her aground, 'as well to caution others for the time to come, as to give opportunity' to him 'to justify himself, and thereby satisfy the world in the reason of his impunity.'<sup>9</sup>

The most serious delinquent in the navy during the period was Captain Grant, of the Reserve. The differences between him and his officers were sufficiently serious to be brought to a court-martial,<sup>1</sup> and he was dismissed his ship,<sup>2</sup> his 'faults' being 'of a very foul sort.'<sup>3</sup> It appears, however, from the correspondence,<sup>4</sup> that the quarrel with his subordinates was the means of disclosing a long-standing conspiracy between the captain and his purser to defraud the king by keeping men in pay upon the books who had deserted the service.<sup>5</sup> It does not speak well for the effectiveness of control in the navy just before the new admiralty commission took office, that the fraudulent dealings on board the Reserve had been the subject of official correspondence as early as 20 March, 1672-3, when the ship's muster-book disappeared and it then transpired that the complement was kept considerably short, that men who were entitled to tickets had not received them, that others were entered or borne on board who were not actually there, and that the officers' accounts for expenses were not signed. It was pointed out at the time by Commissioner Deane that these delinquencies, if proved, would afford the best possible reason for the suppression of the book, and he accordingly suggested that the purser should be called to account by the navy board, it being to his thinking a matter of great importance.<sup>6</sup> Nevertheless, Grant's dismissal did not actually take place until October of the same year. This collusion between pursers and captains was an abuse of long standing in the navy;<sup>7</sup> and traces of other 'ill practices' in connexion with the St. George and the Adventure appear elsewhere in the correspondence.<sup>8</sup>

Among other points of interest should be noticed Pepys's comment on the 'inabilities' of some of the masters of the king's ships, and his suggestion that before appointment they should all be examined by the Trinity House ;<sup>1</sup> the numerous illustrations of his care to remind commanders to send up the journals of their voyages when their ships came in to be paid off ;<sup>2</sup> and the notice taken of the presumption shown by merchantmen, both English and foreign, in wearing the king's colours.<sup>3</sup> There is also a suggestive reference to the standing controversy concerning the relative merits of gentlemen and 'tarpaulins'—'for as no man living,' writes Pepys,<sup>4</sup> 'can be more inclined than myself to favour a gentleman that is a true seaman, so neither is there any man more sensible than (after many years' observation) I am, of the ruinous consequences of an over-hasty admitting persons to the office and charge of seamen upon the bare consideration of their being gentlemen.' This problem has been already discussed in the General Introduction,<sup>5</sup> as also the arrangements for a regular establishment of cabins on board ships of war made by order of the lords of the admiralty, 16 October, 1673.<sup>6</sup>

7. Ships<sup>7</sup>

The allusions to shipbuilding during the eighteen months under consideration are not numerous. There are some evidences of activity while the war lasted ;<sup>8</sup> when it came to an end it was Pepys's own ambition to see that no time was lost 'in the providing a set of new ships that may enable us without the help of France or any other neighbour to contend alone with the Dutch as we have heretofore done (which with sorrow we must acknowledge ourselves unfit to do at this day),'<sup>9</sup> but the need for retrenchment was at first too great for the king to entertain the idea of building more ships. There are allusions during the period to the launch of the Harwich<sup>1</sup> and the Oxford;<sup>2</sup> to the launch of the Katherine yacht at Chatham,<sup>3</sup> the king being present;<sup>4</sup> to a design of July 1674 for having two yachts built at Portsmouth for the King of France 'in imitation of his Majesty's';<sup>5</sup> and to the building of two new small frigates for the express purpose of 'annoying those of Salée.'<sup>6</sup> There are also numerous references to the galleys at Genoa and Leghorn.<sup>7</sup>

By an order of 16 October, 1673,<sup>8</sup> the lords of the admiralty made it 'an established rule' that all ships to be hereafter built were to have one port fewer on each side, the handling of the guns having been found by experience to be 'much impeded' by the nearness of the ports to each other. By another order, of 20 December, 1673,<sup>9</sup> it was provided that, 'in regard of the many and good proofs of the usefulness of Sir Philip Howard's late invention for sheathing his Majesty's ships with lead,' they should for the time to come be sheathed in no other manner without special order from the lords. The fate of this important experiment is described below.<sup>10</sup> Another experiment was also ordered on 12 August, 1674,<sup>11</sup> with cypress trees from Virginia, which were said to be of dimensions large enough for the masts of yachts, 'and in their quality both lighter and tougher than those of fir we now use.'

8. Miscellaneous

The perennial abuse of chips, to which reference is made in Hollond's Discourses of the Navy,<sup>1</sup> makes its appearance again in the period under consideration. The workmen were entitled by tradition to 'lawful hewed chips that fell from the axe,' and at Chatham at any rate it was customary on 'chip-day' for women to come into the yard, like gleaners into the harvest-field, to carry off chips.<sup>2</sup> The difficulty was to prevent the workmen from splitting up good wood into chips to increase the amount of the perquisites, and this was especially the case when ships were being stripped of joinery work, which could be easily rendered useless for the future by careless handling. This abuse attracted the attention of the admiralty commissioners, and on 31 October, 1673,<sup>3</sup> they called the attention of the navy board to 'the great charge his Majesty is daily put to' by the workmen 'spending much of their time and his Majesty's timber in a wasteful cutting of chips,' and desired the board to give 'such effectual directions to the commissioners of the outports and the master shipwrights of each yard as may prevent the like evil for the time to come.'

References also occur to Charles II.'s financial dependence upon France;<sup>4</sup> to his love of ships and ship-building;<sup>5</sup> and to various points of interest in connexion with the use of flags, and the respect to be paid to the king's colours.<sup>6</sup> The language of a fresh warrant issued to the slopseller of the navy<sup>7</sup> also suggests that, although no uniform for seamen was as yet prescribed, the operation of the system under which clothes were furnished by a monopolist contractor must have been already leading to something of that nature on board the king's ships. There is an allusion to a custom by which the Cinque Ports sent two persons yearly to regulate the fishing at Hastings and Brighthelmston, now apparently beginning to fall into disuse ;<sup>1</sup> and to a composition of 12 barrels of herrings apiece offered by Dutch fishermen to one of the king's commanders to save their being carried into Yarmouth for disrespect to the king's flag—a variety of fine which was spoken of as an innovation, although some measure of the kind appeared to derive a sort of sanction from 'the practice of the sea.'<sup>2</sup> Other letters lay down the limits within which the lords of the admiralty were willing to protect debtors in the service of the navy from arrest and imprisonment by their creditors ;<sup>3</sup> and from a letter of 30 October, 1674,<sup>4</sup> relating to the composition of a new commission of oyer and terminer for the admiralty, it may be inferred that it now included for the first time some of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. There are also references to a scheme for making a harbour of refuge at Dover.<sup>5</sup>

Mr. Pepys acknowledges two presents during the period : on 11 November, 1674,<sup>6</sup> he thanks Mr. Stock, of Dover, for something which 'he has not yet tasted, but doubts not its proving good' ; and on 28 September<sup>7</sup> he expresses his gratitude to Mr. Martin, the consul at Algiers, for adding a lion to the inmates of his house, who is 'as tame as you sent him, and as good company.'

The Admiralty Letters also throw some light on one of the doubtful points connected with Pepys's Register of Sea-Officers.<sup>8</sup> Under ordinary circumstances there would be a very strong presumption that wherever Pepys in the Register gives a date up to 25 March in any year, it should be read as belonging to the succeeding year. There are, however, one or two indications which suggest that Pepys, who sometimes gives the years in both styles, either was not always quite consistent, or sometimes made mistakes.<sup>1</sup> It is therefore necessary to check the dates given in the Register by those in the Admiralty Letters, and the result in the six cases where this is possible, is to prove that in five of them at any rate, 1673 is to be read as 1673-4.<sup>2</sup> The exception is probably connected with a mistake in the Register, as it is clear from a letter of 19 August, 1673,<sup>3</sup> that Captain David Trotter was promoted direct from the Richmond to the Dragon, and could not possibly have commanded the Speedwell between these appointments, under a commission dated 9 March, 1673[-4], as the Register asserts.<sup>4</sup> It should be noticed also that the year 1673, given in the Register of Ships<sup>5</sup> as the date of the casting away of the Nightingale, stands for 16 January, 1673-4.<sup>6</sup>

It is probable that the value of Charnock's Biographia Navalis has been hitherto somewhat overrated. It will appear from the footnotes printed below that Pepys's correspondence corrects him upon a good many points of detail, and although Charnock's longer biographical articles are often full of interest, the shorter ones do little more than throw the tabular navy lists into continuous prose.<sup>7</sup>

It is probable that Charnock had access to a list of naval commissions now in the Public Record Office, but he was without other materials for the obscurer lives.

OF
S. P.'S LETTERS

VOL. II.<sup>1</sup>
ADMIRALTY

FROM JUNE 19, 1673, TO DECEMBER 31, 1673.

[Vellum folio, stamped as described in vol. i. p. x supra, but without book-plates; marbled edges. Press mark No. 2849. Ledger index, 92 pp.; 5 blank pp.; 455 written pp. numbered as 453 pp.; 5 blank pp. The letters in this volume are written from Whitehall, unless otherwise stated.]

1. [p. 1.] 1673, 19 June. S. P. to Mr. Glover.—‘His Majesty having been pleased upon his Royal Highness’s resignation to call’ him ‘from the navy board to the execution of the place of secretary to the office of lord high admiral of England,’ in reply to his letter of the 17th inst. he writes concerning the convoy of colliers.

2. [p. 1.] 19 June. S. P. to Captain Eliot.<sup>2</sup>—Leave to come to town; he will then have an opportunity of informing his Royal Highness of his reasons for wishing to have the guns of the Anne changed.

<sup>1</sup> This volume, though the second of the series described as ‘S. P.’s Letters,’ appears to be the first of the series marked ‘Admiralty.’ Vol. I. may have contained official letters at a date earlier than Pepys’s appointment as secretary. It is not in the Pepysian Library.

3. [p. 1.] 19 June. S. P. to John Howell, Esq.—The king thanks him for his care in pressing seamen for the fleet, and for his information of the neglect of the custom-house officers, who will be called to account by the lord treasurer. The scarcity of men in his parts will not cause him to slacken his care in procuring as many as can be had. Prince Rupert has sent vessels to his parts and to other ports to receive them.

4. [p. 2.] [19 June.] S. P. to Mr. Baylie.—To acknowledge his letter of the 16th inst. to Sir John Werden.

5. [p. 2.] [19 June.] S. P. to —.—Acknowledges his letters from Sir John Werden of 11th and 13th inst. come to S. P.'s hands, and prays the continuance of the correspondence. Does not yet hear that the Hunter is arrived at Portsmouth, but orders shall be sent to meet her by the time she may get to Plymouth.

6. [p. 3.] 19 June. S. P. to Captain Grant.—Leaves it to his discretion to consider whether there be any hopes of gaining any considerable number of men in the Forest of Dean that may 'countervaile' the charge of a journey thither [17].

7. [p. 3.] 19 June. S. P. to Captain Guy.<sup>1</sup>—Care will be taken for indemnifying those officers who, by reason of their attendance on the king's service, are unable to comply with the requirements of the Test Act.

8. [p. 3.] 24 June. The same to the same.—Mr. Barber to be entered on board his ship as a reformado.<sup>2</sup>

9. [p. 4.] 24 June. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Writes by command of the king, 'who is at this time very earnest for the despatch of all things requisite for putting the fleet into a speedy condition of going to sea,' to pray their issuing the most effectual orders, particularly for the despatch of the two months' victuals ordered entire, beside what they shall expend daily till they sail, and one month's more to be lodged on board victualling vessels in the manner directed by yesterday's warrant. of the buoys to be provided by the Trinity House, as also a store of vinegar.

10. [p. 4.] 24 June. The same to the same.—To order the discharging of two shipwrights at Deptford and three at Chatham, that they may go over into Ireland, 'there to assist in building the frigates contracted for by Sir Edward Spragge.'

11. [p. 5.] 25 June. S. P. to [Prince Rupert<sup>1</sup>].—To inform him that the 'fireships now providing here' are for the most part ready to take in their provisions and 'fireworks.' Prays him speedily to assign them to flags, with directions that some 'able and active person' be sent up from each flag to hasten their despatch. Encloses list of the fireships and their commanders, as also of the sloops now fitting out. John Belt, one of the commanders, has not yet appeared for his commission.

12. [p. 5.] 25 June. S. P. to Hartgill Baron, Esq.—Concerning a missing list.

13. [p. 6.] 25 June.—Warrant to Lieutenant Young, of the York, to discharge Nicholas Vanderlande, 'a Dutchman born and no seaman,' lately pressed by him as he was actually employed in his Majesty's service as a baker, and now on board the Rejoice ketch.

14. [p. 6.] 26 June.—Certificate of a true copy of a warrant of 22 March last, whereof the commander and lieutenant of the Cambridge are desired to take notice in regard of a complaint that the persons therein protected had been pressed out of a Guildford barge, when coming thence with timber for the use of Deptford Yard.

15. [p. 6.] 26 June.—Warrant for the discharge of one Richard Bullin, porter, if aged and sickly and no seaman, as alleged.

16. [p. 7.] 27 June. S. P. to Captain Le Neve.<sup>2</sup>—Since he is on the coast, bound with convoys for the Port of London, warns him that by advices of Prince Rupert of the 26th the Dutch fleet then lay at anchor in the Gunfleet.

17. [p. 7.] 28 June. S. P. to Captain Grant, Bristol.—As he has now no reason to expect to get any further supply of seamen from Bristol, he is to return to Portsmouth to the Reserve, 'unless you can by a little longer stay light upon any of those men you mention who endeavour to preserve themselves from the press by pretence of being masters of ships while they indeed are not so.'

18. [p. 7.] 28 June. S. P. to Colonel Piper,<sup>1</sup> at Plymouth.—Will arrange about convoy for the six Virginia ships bound for London. Thinks the Hunter may be appointed for that service. Warrants and commissions granted by the duke already confirmed by proclamation.

19. [p. 8.] 28 June. S. P. to Sir Roger Cuttance,<sup>2</sup> Weymouth.—Has moved some of the writer's late fellow officers in his matter.

20. [p. 8.] 28 June. S. P. to Captain Trotter, commander of the Richmond, at Plymouth.—Approves his returning to his station on the coast of Ireland till further order.

21. [p. 8.] 28 June. S. P. to Captain Binning, commander of the Portsmouth pink, Yarmouth.—Is sorry for the accounts he gives of 'Captain Edwards his pressing.' Want of men in the fleet justifies 'all the industry that can be made use of towards the supplying it,' but nothing can excuse 'his taking of moneys.' Send particulars.

22. [p. 9.] 1 July. S. P. to the Master and Rulers of Watermen's Hall.—To attend the king and council.

23. [p. 9.] 1 July. S. P. to Colonel Piper,<sup>1</sup> at Plymouth.—Encloses his Majesty's directions touching the Straits fleet [26]. Thanks him for advice of the proceedings of the French fleet at St. Christopher's.

28. [p. 11.] 1 July. S. P. to Colonel Piper,<sup>1</sup> at Plymouth.—Approves the instructions he has given the Hunter touching the Straits fleet.

29. [p. 11.] 2 July. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Sends for their perusal enclosed warrants to the Lieutenant of the Tower and the Rulers of the Watermen's Hall about pressing men. As they are informed from the Lieutenant of the Tower that men are brought in there and in readiness to be shipped, they are to give order for vessels to receive them, and to demand from the Tower what soldiers shall be needful to secure them.

30. [p. 12.] 2 July. S. P. to Sir William Jennens.<sup>2</sup>—To attend the king to explain his proceedings in the pressing of one Herring, a waterman, 'though at the same time in the custody of one of the Rulers of the Watermen's Company, who had pressed him for his Majesty's service.'

31. [p. 12.] 3 July. S. P. to Mr. Fowell,<sup>3</sup> at Plymouth.—The king approves his industry in getting of men. The Plymouth and other ships are hourly expected at Plymouth with their convoys from the Straits, and the pressed men should be put on board as soon as they arrive. Prays him to give notice of any further numbers pressed, that timely conveyance may not be wanting for bringing them to the fleet, 'where his Majesty's occasions call

83. [p. 13.] 3 July. S. P. to Colonel Piper.—Upon notice given by Mr. Fowell, vice-admiral of Devon, of about 200 pressed men waiting to be conveyed to the fleet, he is directed on the arrival of the Straits fleet [31] to consider of the quickest way of having them put on board the king's ships, or merchantmen bound to the eastward. Assurance to be given to the commanders that they shall be punctually allowed for the victuals which, according to the king's allowance, they shall expend in their passage.

84. [p. 13.] 3 July. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>1</sup>—The king will probably have the whole state of the stores inquired into [58 and 64], and some orders taken for such a supply 'as may answer the occasions which must inevitably follow the least new action that can, and in probability must, arrive upon the going forth of the fleet; at least if the enemy continue on our coast.'

85. [p. 14.] 3 July. S. P. to Mr. Dawkes, to Dover.—On arrival of the Straits fleet in sight of Dover, immediate notice to be sent them that the Dutch fleet are upon the coast.

86. [p. 14.] 4 July. S. P. to Mr. Baron.—Hopes the fireships will all be with his Highness by Sunday; might have been sooner had the commanders given any tolerable attendance, but Lieutenant Wood does very much forward them. Complains that the muster-masters of the fleet do not send up the accounts of their musters, 'without which neither can the manning of the fleet be ever rightly known, nor any of the abuses obviated that the king is exposed to by false musters or ratings.' The number of tenders in the fleet is very great, and 'by the long stay of many of them here aloft, and the slender accounts they give of the service they are doing,' the writer is 'very doubtful lest a great part of them may be so far overlooked as that they may lie in pay and victuals without any strict account taken from them by the captains of the ships on which they pretend to wait.' This is a great charge, 'it being every day's observation that the river is full aloft of these small vessels, protected from any account by virtue of their jacks.' Prays him to take what notice of it he thinks fit.

37. [p. 15.] 4 July. S. P. to Captain Le Neve.<sup>1</sup>—Congratulates him on his safe return with the Straits fleet, 'it being greatly the fear of most that it was with some eye towards you and your fleet that the Dutch have hovered so long upon our coast.' One welcome circumstance more is his bringing no inconsiderable supply of men at this time to the fleet. The king approves of his purpose of coming to the Hope.

38. [p. 16.] 4 July. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king, his Royal Highness, and the council approve their advice touching Captain Haddock's being specially charged with the care of Deptford and Woolwich yards. They also approve Mr. Culpepper's proposition.<sup>2</sup> The king approves of what they have done in publishing that the bringing in by the masters of persons unable instead of able seamen will not be accepted. As to the disposal of the men brought in, Captain Watson is to have thirty for manning the Swallow; the rest are to be employed in putting those ships into a condition of going to sea that are intended for transporting the 4,000 foot soldiers. The king approves the authorising of bargemen to press upon the River about Windsor, Henley, Reading, &c., provided that the warrants are placed in discreet hands. Hopes that the condition of the fleet as to men will receive help from the Straits fleet now come in [37]. Refers to the muster-masters' neglect in supplying them with muster-books, and the great number and little service of the tenders [36], 'they being both points wherein his Majesty's service and the saving of his treasure are greatly concerned.' The Essex ketch and the vessels in her company to stay in Yarmouth Roads till the coast is clear.

59. [p. 25.] 19 July. *S. The king, 'being upon some fresh considerations led to the resolving upon sending as much force as conveniently he can immediately to the Soundings,' would not have the Speedwell sent eastward besides the Adventure and Morning Star [42], but would rather advise that the [pressed] men be divided among the ships with him in case of want, or else sent to Portsmouth for the Reserve, and that she be immediately sent, with or after the other two, to the Soundings, there to look carefully out for the Virginia fleet and convoy it out of danger. A couple of frigates will be sent also from the Thames, besides the Norwich and the Dragon. The commanders of the Dragon, Speedwell and Hunter to follow the orders of Captain Tyrwhitt, commander of the Adventure [60].

63. [p. 27.] 19 July. S. P. to Mr. Lanyon.—To despatch the fitting out the Hunter as soon as she returns, that she may lose no time in going to the Soundings [59].

64. [p. 28.] 21 July. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—To use all possible despatch in drawing up for them the state of the king's naval stores, called for by warrant of 14th inst. (2) What provisions mentioned in their estimate can be timely had with ready money, and how soon the works to be performed therewith may be finished. (3) What the debt of the navy is which must presently be satisfied for supporting its credit. (4) What the present debt to the workmen of each yard is to the end of the last quarter, and how much must be speedily supplied 'for the encouraging and enabling them to go on vigorously in the preparations to be made against the return of the fleet after an engagement.' (5) What the debt of the navy will be on 1 September next to seamen's wages and the freight of hired ships, and what the weekly growing charge while the debt is unsatisfied.

They desire them to pay off the London Merchant's company, and restore her to her owners. They approve colliers hired to transport 500 men each, taking only 400. Desire their weekly attendance on Saturdays at eight in the morning. The board to send the commissioners a duplicate of their weekly certificate to the lord treasurer 'for the informing us in the true state of the expense, treasure, and debt of the navy.'

65. [p. 29.] 21 July. The same to Prince Rupert.—Upon information from the navy board of a complaint made to them by the commissioners for sick and wounded seamen, 'touching the ill condition in which seamen are through wounds or sickness frequently sent on shore by their want of clothes,' they have resolved that commanders and pursers shall supply any seaman set ashore on account of wounds or sickness with what clothes he shall demand, not exceeding one month's pay. No sick are to be put on shore above Gravesend; but wounded are to be carried up to the hospitals in London. Orders to prevent commanders pressing men out of victuallers are not observed, so that 'a considerable quantity of provisions lying at Portsmouth, and upon which the next month's supply for the whole fleet does in an extraordinary measure depend, cannot be fetched thence by reason of the late impresting of the seamen out of the victuallers' vessels designed for the fetching thereof.' There are other instances also in relation to stores, &c., respecting both the office of the navy and the ordnance. His Highness is urged to cause some effectual course to be taken for preventing it in the future.

To discharge the company of the Revenge as soon as they can obtain money from the treasurer of the navy. There is nothing wherein his Majesty 'seems at this time to express more care' than for removing the capers with which the western coast is so much infested ; so the writer desires that he will not for a small matter decline the despatching forth the ships now with him. For preventing the complaints which daily arise of the neglects of the king's commanders when they come into port in the despatching of their ships forth again, desires him to hasten them out of Plymouth as fast as they shall come in, and also to report neglect.

[p. 57.] 8 Aug. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—To prevent the disputes frequently arising between the victualling contractors and the board touching the constructions of the present contract, as also for the better providing for the service, they have thought it expedient that the contract should be entirely reviewed. They therefore require the board to consult Sir Jeremy Smyth, as comptroller of the victuallers' accounts, and to transmit to the commissioners his observations in writing together with their own, taking care in particular to satisfy them in the two points lately argued before them by the victuallers and the board: (1) The antiquity, ground, and consequences of the present practices avowed by the victuallers of making good to the pursers (at their discretions) some part of the victualling warrants by money instead of provisions. (2) How far the victuallers of the navy are chargeable with, and what is to be added to the means his Majesty is already at the charge of, for preventing the 'insufferable evil' arising through the combinations of the victuallers and pursers in

139. [p. 64.] 9 Aug. [S. P.] to Sir Thomas Allin<sup>1</sup> at Yarmouth.—The fleet is still upon the enemy's coasts, and their fleet has been within sight of ours. There will be a convoy for the fishery at the end of the month. Has acquainted his Majesty with the charge of the ships attending the land forces, and that their victualling draws apace towards an end; he is perhaps desirous to see a little further towards the issue of the fleet's engagement before taking any resolution touching these forces or the ships that are to transport them.

140. [p. 65.] 11 Aug. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Desires them to enable him to inform the king of the state of the readiness of the month's provisions for the service of the fleet, Prince Rupert having desired that these may be immediately disposed of in victualling vessels for the answering of his sudden call for the same. They are also to inform the king of the weekly charge, as well of victuals and wages as freight, of the hired ships taken up for the use of the land forces. Desires the board to prepare an estimate for the lords of the admiralty of the money the king's service will call for before Christmas next.

186. [p. 82.] 20 Aug. The Lords of the Admiralty to [Prince Rupert].—They are informed from Sir Thomas Allin<sup>1</sup> of his Highness's intention of coming with the fleet to within 18 or 19 leagues W and by N of Yarmouth, with purpose of staying there 4 or 5 days. They have grounds of expecting that the clamour of sick men for want of clothes will henceforward be removed, by care in supplying those in want of them with clothes to the value of a month's pay, and in causing the clothes of each sick man to be carefully sent off with him at the time of his being put on shore [65]. They wish that together with the Constant Warwick his Highness could have spared them another frigate, for preventing the mischief by capers which infest the whole coast along, from the north round to the westward, and for securing the colliers in particular, 40 or 50 sail of which have been lately chased on shore, for securing the rich fleet of East India and Barbados already arrived at Kinsale, and the Virginia fleet daily expected, and for providing timely convoy for the Yarmouth fishery. For answering these services they desire 5 or 6 of the smallest and best sailing frigates out of the fleet. Though his Highness's general silence to them concerning the wants of the fleet keeps them from any great apprehensions of its being under any present distress, they have shipped a supply of victuals for the whole fleet for an entire month, but do not know where to send it. Desire frequent advices concerning its state, proceedings and designs.

Is troubled to find that De Ruyter, who as he hears hath not full 600 men, 'should have 200 of them made up of our countrymen and Scotch.' Care is taken for vessels to serve our coasts, and particularly to the northward, whence come frequent instances of mischief by capers. Is not concerned for colliers chased on shore, since they were so little concerned for their own security as to come out without convoy.

They are to give notice to the lords what number of muster-books they have received this year from the muster-masters of the fleet; as also to see that care be taken before the pay of every ship to have the books cast; and that, in particular, the number of supernumeraries on each be computed, and the admiral's instructions observed before the officers of the ship receive their wages, 'that it may appear to his Majesty how far his clemency shown to them in the dispensing with their neglect of the said instructions the last year hath been answered by their better observation of them this'; and further to see that at the pay of each seaman that shall hereafter be discharged, his rate in the ship's books may be rectified by what at their personal appearance at the pay they shall be judged to be by the comptroller of the navy then attending, who shall take notice in writing of the abode of each man, for the more ready recovering of the said seamen when his Majesty shall next call for their service.

For the better encouragement of seamen who volunteered this year, the king's promise made to them at the beginning of the year is to be 'punctually made good to them, in their being exempted from being turned over into any other ship when the ship unto which they respectively belong shall come to be paid off,' and to that end a distinction is to be made on the ship's books between pressed men and volunteers. Persons claiming a right of common in Epping Forest have applied to the lord treasurer to oppose the board's scheme [122 and 200]; he will therefore take the opinion of some counsel learned in the law before he issues his warrant for felling the trees. The board is to see that the companies of ships intended to be laid up are forthwith put into petty warrant victuals during the time they continue in the said ships unpaid off. The Roebuck and the Country's Welfare, now in the River, are to be refitted and cleaned and furnished with two months' victuals.

259. [p. 111.] 3 Sept. S. P. to Sir John Harman.<sup>2</sup>—The king is very sensible of his illness, and the want he shall have of his service. The Merlin yacht is sent down to bring him up [257].

260. [p. 112.] 3 Sept. S. P. to Commissioner Beach.<sup>3</sup>—The fleet being now at the buoy of the Nore, there will be no further use for the Buck dogger, which is ordered to stay here.

261. [p. 112.] 3 Sept. S. P. to Captain Taylor.<sup>4</sup>—Desires him to see that none of the ships intended for the transportation of soldiers or victuals neglect any opportunity of coming into the River, 'it being a thing much to be suspected that the pleasure of lying in freight, out of danger of wear and tear, will be a temptation apt to prevail with merchantmen.' To report any of them faulty therein, that the navy board may punish delays by deductions from their freight.

262. [p. 112.] 3 Sept. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>5</sup>—They are in very earnest expectation of the arrival of the fleet from Kinsale [203]. Hopes the Reserve may be supplied with men out of the Barbados fleet [249].

263. [p. 113.] 3 Sept. S. P. to Captain Berry.<sup>6</sup>—The victualling and transporting ships being at Harwich out of danger, he is ordered to the northward.

<sup>4</sup> Captain Silas Taylor was storekeeper at Harwich. He is not to be confused with Captain John Taylor, commissioner at Harwich, who died in 1670 (see vol. i. p. 15 supra). There are a good many references to both Taylors in Pepys's Diary, from which we learn that the official referred to in the text wrote an anthem (viii. 58) and a play (viii. 317). Pepys did not think much of him in either line.

264. [p. 113.] 3 Sept. The Lords of the Admiralty to Mr. Surveyor Tippetts and Captain Haddock.<sup>1</sup>—Is sorry to find that so much time will be taken up for the fitting forth a small squadron. They are (with his Majesty's approbation) come to this resolution: That all the ships of the first parcel, which the board said would be ready in eight days, be fitted for sea as fast as may be; as also the St. Michael, and all the rest of the second parcel (under the second rate), which together make up the list in the margin; and that they be victualled for two months out of the month's victuals which was designed and said to be in readiness for the victualling forth the whole fleet. These Prince Rupert (who is going down to the fleet this afternoon) will send forth to sea (together with the French squadron), under the command of the Earl of Ossory.<sup>2</sup>

As for the rest of the ships, which need greater repairs, the first and second rates are to be sent up to Chatham to be paid off as fast as the treasurer of the navy shall be supplied with money for doing the same; and the ships put into a condition as soon as may be of being repaired against the next spring. The remainder of the third rate and under are to go to Woolwich or Deptford, as the navy board shall appoint. They are to take care that the seamen do not desert the service of the ships which are to go out, while their ships are under repair; that for the health of the ships' companies, both in the ships that are to be laid up and those going forth again, the ballast is carefully sifted and dried; that musters are taken, either by the muster-master or clerk of the check, of the ships as they are now come in, and likewise of those which are to go out again; and that the ships to be laid up are ordered into petty warrant victuals.

266. [p. 115.] 4 Sept. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>3</sup>—Hopes that 'a few days will put an end to the trouble which our concerns for that fleet<sup>4</sup> doth necessarily give both us and yourself.'

267. [p. 115.] 6 Sept. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—His Majesty's service 'calling no less for all possible despatch to be used in the setting forth again to sea that part of his fleet which upon a late survey thereof taken by the surveyor of the navy and Commissioner Haddock, is found capable of the same, than that due care be also had and provision made for the orderly disposing, paying off and repairing that part thereof which is to be laid up,' the lords enclose a copy of the orders lately sent to those gentlemen [264], and desire that the board will put into execution so much of them as relates to their office, 'particularly in the speedy refitting and victualling of the ships that are to go abroad, the distributing to the several yards those that are to be laid up, and putting the latter into petty warrant victuals,' as also into the best condition they can for their timely repairs against the next year; and in order thereto they are to hasten the estimate of the whole charge of setting forth the whole fleet next spring, and their answer to the late letter touching the victualling contract [125].

It being much to be feared that, what by reason of supernumeraries, and the transferrings, sicknesses, and deaths of seamen and soldiers in the present fleet, great numbers of tickets will be found at the coming in thereof, it is earnestly recommended to their care that the business of the ticket office be found in such order that the persons concerned in attending the said office meet with none of those delays or other occasions of complaint which 'to the great discouragement of seamen and dishonour to his Majesty's service' they have heretofore been found very

This evil the king expects to find thoroughly removed by the recent establishment of a particular officer under the inspection of the board for the better managing of that office, and by their causing the instructions which were at the same time confirmed for his direction to be effectually complied with.

Postscript.—For the better securing the king against the frauds he is exposed to in the passing of tickets, the muster-masters and clerks of the check should send duplicates of their books to the treasurer of the navy, a duty wholly omitted by them.

<sup>1</sup> This letter taken with No. 283 identifies 'Mr. Perriman' as the Joseph Perriman who had been appointed early in the year to command one of the Chatham sloops (Charnock, Biog. Nav. i. 399). There was also a Captain John Perriman, who had commanded the Ostrich fireship (supra, vol. i. p. 392), and it is to this latter officer that most of the letters in this volume are addressed. He appears at this time to have been holding some official post under the navy board (see No. 290, infra, and index to *Cal. S. P. 818. [p. 138.] 15 Sept. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—They are to give directions about building the yacht at Woolwich according to their estimate of the 8th inst. of 989*l.* 10*s.* [200]. They are to take care, by the assistance of the auditor of the storekeepers' accounts, that the clerks of the control in the king's yards strictly comply with their instructions, that so it may appear to the board (with what they are to expect from the clerks of the check as to wages)—in order to their reporting the same to the lords from time to time—how far the master shipwrights comply with their duty as to keeping to their estimates.

820. [p. 139.] 15 Sept. S. P. to Mr. Surveyor Tippetts and Commissioner Haddock.—The lords are very well satisfied with their account of their proceedings towards bringing in the great ships that are to be laid up, and the despatch of those that are to go forth [264]. Since the officers of the navy are not in a condition to perfect the estimate long since demanded [267 and 310] without the help of the surveyor, he is immediately to repair hither for the despatch of this matter.

821. [p. 139.] [15 or 16 Sept.] S. P. to Captain Mason.—To hasten out his ship towards Kinsale to meet the Virginia fleet [307].

822. [p. 140.] 16 Sept. S. P. to Captain Taylor.<sup>1</sup>—Thanks him for his advice touching the neglects of the hospital ships and other small vessels. Doubts not that the commissioners of the navy, if applied to, will furnish him with a boat proper for his work in ranging the river and taking musters where otherwise vessels would escape it. Nor does the writer much doubt that, notwithstanding his Majesty may out of good husbandry think it unnecessary to increase the charge of that place by the erection of any new officer, or bestowing upon the officer that is there a greater title, yet such a power will not be denied him as may enable him to deal with vessels that come into his harbour upon other terms than by way of entreaty; it being no less certain that the power of commanding them while in that port should be lodged in him, at least as far as concerns his obliging them to give an account of the reason of their coming in, the occasion of their stay, and the numbers and attendance of their men.

823. [p. 140.] 16 Sept. S. P. to Captain Hobbs, Levant Merchant.—Acquaints him of a complaint made to his Majesty by a French lieutenant taken prisoner by the Hollanders at St. Helena, against his master and gunners, to whom he had entrusted 150 crowns. Desires him to examine these officers, and to transmit their answer to the writer for presentation to the king.

324. [p. 141.] 16 Sept. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>1</sup>—Desires him to hasten out the Dover for the security of the Virginia fleet, which is said to have arrived at Kinsale [331].

325. [p. 141.] 17 Sept. S. P. to the Earl of Ossory.<sup>2</sup>—Returns herewith the king's commands touching the putting on shore the soldiers, providing an additional guard to Sheerness, and other matters. His Majesty approves his sending in the ships mentioned in his letter of the 14th, and hastening out those designed for convoys, towards which the writer has this night written, by his Majesty's command, to the Drake, newly arrived in the Downs from Calais, to attend his lordship forthwith at the Nore. His Majesty does well like his care in getting a perfect account of the pressed men in order to the manning of the ships going out, which will be in want thereof by the taking out of the landmen. The king takes notice that the distribution of the ships to the several yards lately made by the surveyor and Commissioner Haddock, and by them sent to the king by Prince Rupert and confirmed by his Majesty, is not strictly followed. Not that his Majesty is at all dissatisfied therein, but he expects Mr. Tippetts to bring with him [320] a perfect account how the ships are now intended to be disposed of, in order to their issuing suitable orders to the ships and yards that may not interfere with those given by his Highness or his lordship.

Tells him that his commands are obeyed as to the officers' places he desires to bestow,<sup>3</sup> and the hastening down all the small tenders now aloft; there being an immediate occasion of employing a good part of these in transporting 3,000 men with the Duke of Monmouth to Calais.

He would have had this by the last night's post, but, by reason of the king's spending all that day among the East Indiamen at Greenhithe and Erith, his pleasure could not be timely enough obtained.

329. [p. 144.] 18 Sept. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>3</sup>—Has communicated to the lords the complaints contained in his letter of the 16th made by the officers of the Reserve against their captain, and those the same post brought of the captain against his lieutenant and officers [327]. The whole matter will be brought to a court-martial as soon as there are commanders enough in the port. This will not be long, as Sir John Holmes<sup>4</sup> and three ships are on their way, if they have not met with the same ill effects of the late storms as the French fleet, which was with them. These were all driven from their anchors, some into the Downs and others 'out of our knowledge yet what is become of them,' and the Bourbon, 50 guns, was run aground on the beach near Deal, and is in danger of being lost. Desires him to give the earliest notice he can of having 5 commanders together with him in port that may hold a court-martial, when a commission will be sent down.

The tickets of companies that are to attend the Duke of Monmouth into France to be immediately despatched, that they may be paid before going [325].

335. [p. 147.] 19 Sept. *S. for the future uncertainty in their department, the lords require them, in pursuance of their late debate on this subject (the commissioners themselves being present), to establish effectual methods to their officers in the several districts and hospitals, and by virtue thereof to present them weekly with an abstract of the state of their whole action, wherein may from week to week appear: (1) The general number of the sick and wounded men then undergoing care. (2) The particular numbers thereof in each of the districts and hospitals respectively. (3) The weekly increase of the said numbers. (4) The weekly charge of the whole. (5) The decrease the same doth in each week receive, whether by recoveries or deaths. (6) The state of the particular debt arising therefrom weekly in each district and hospital, with the general debt of the whole. (7) The moneys received weekly, and by what proportions the same hath been distributed to the several districts and hospitals.

The lords will expect this digested into proper columns for their readier view and information, and in such manner that they may receive satisfaction by proper vouchers in reference to any particular thereof concerning which they shall find cause to inquire.

And since to make this method applicable to the checking both the ships' books and the account of their own officers in the particular ports, as to the right discharging and re-entering of persons coming under their care, and thereby preventing the evil of having seamen borne at the same time both on shipboard and shore, it is necessary that their accounts should not only be so digested as that each ship's company may be brought together into one account for the more ready comparing of the same with the said books, but that the same may be performed so timely as to be capable of having the proper use made of it before the ships come to be paid off; the commissioners are therefore required to transmit their unarranged accounts, with as much frequency and despatch as may be, to Mr. Richard Gibson, who has been appointed by the lords, on the nomination of the navy board and with the approbation of the king, to reduce them to such a method, by collecting into particular books all the men of each ship's company, and placing them therein in such order, either by an alphabet or otherwise, as may facilitate the application thereof to the ends aforesaid by the navy board before they proceed to the paying off of any ships.

Captain Gardiner,<sup>6</sup> of the Barnaby, has arrived at Plymouth with 40 sail of Virginiamen, having sent Captain Cotterell, of the Augustine, with 9 more into Bristol, having had a clash with Evertsen upon the coast of Virginia, who burned 5 and took 7 merchantmen through the cowardice of Cotterell in running away. 'However, very happy it is that the rest are come safe home, there remaining nothing now of that sort upon our hands but our ships from the Straits, for the securing of which all care is taken that the condition of our ships here will admit.' Desires information (1) whether in the condition in which the ship lies by reason of those differences the service the king expects from her is likely to be performed as it ought to be; (2) whether Captain Grant is a man that will be disordered by drink; (3) whether it be true what he wrote, that his officers are ashamed of what they have charged him with, and do renounce it.

If the protection was not shown to Captain Harris, little blame is like to fall to his share; if otherwise, neither the king nor the lords will think it sufferable that the very packet-boats should be rifled and the whole service of them disappointed at the pleasure of one disorderly officer [358 and 419].

In case of further demands from the French, he is to inform himself what may be absolutely necessary, and to send up advice thereof hither, with the condition his Majesty's stores with him are in to answer the same. This method the king is rather pleased to use in regard that he in his letter seemed to imply that the wants of the Glorieux were answered by one cable and one anchor, though the application from the French ambassador was that not less than two cables would serve [345-7, 352, 438].

without any regard to the 7th<sup>1</sup> and 29th<sup>2</sup> articles of the lord high admiral's instructions, the board are to take care that the commanders are pricked out of pay for their time of absence since the fleet's coming in ; and that for the time to come it be looked upon as a standing rule in the navy that commanders of ships be subject to the musters of the clerks of the check and muster-masters, and their absences from on board noted upon the books in the same manner as the absences of the rest of the ship's company are, and their pay thereupon stopped, until they can justify their said absences by order either from the lords themselves or from their superior officers [527]. The lords also direct that where any time shall now or hereafter appear to have been lost in the seasonable providing of books for the discharging of a ship's company through any neglect of the commander, the value of the charge thereof occasioned to the king be represented to the lords before the commander is paid.

And whereas they are further informed by Mr. Speaker that the practice of splitting of books is continued, they further direct that the board forbear the continuance of the said practice where ships are ordered to be paid entirely off, or to report to the lords the reasons moving them to the contrary [594].

<sup>2</sup> Quoted in the text thus : ' You are to take special care at the coming in of your ship to be laid up not to suffer your purser upon any pretence whatever to depart the ship until six pay-books be provided according to the form annexed, which books, so prepared and signed by yourself and signing officers, you are personally to take care to see immediately despatched to the principal officers and commissioners of the navy, as you will answer unto me for what inconveniences and damage may arise to his Majesty from the neglect thereof.'

413. [p. 184.] 1 Oct. The same to the same.—The instances are so frequent and so pressing of the ill consequences of that liberty universally taken by commanders of neglecting their duties, and particularly those parts thereof which are contained in the lord high admiral's instructions—and this notwithstanding the king's clemency in remitting their failures last year—that the lords cannot but repeat their desires and expectations that the members of the board do (each of them in their respective places) see that the payment of the wages of every commander and officer is withheld until they are satisfied that he has performed his duty in every respect according to his said instructions. To that purpose they are to digest their inquiries 'into such a method respecting the several duties of the respective commanders and officers as may be most effectual to his Majesty, and with the least difficulty to such as shall be found to have performed their duties as they ought to have done by the lord admiral's instructions; and those thereof in an especial manner (among the rest) which respect the keeping and transmitting' to them 'due account of the entering, rating, and discharging of men, the preventing of supernumeraries, the receiving and expending of stores and provisions, and the preserving of the sober discipline of his Majesty's fleet.'

Instead of this the writer is almost hourly applied to for vessels to take in single companies and parcels of companies at different and distant places; and whereas they were all intended at first to be landed at Calais, it is now said they are all to go to Dieppe. 448. [p. 201.] [7 Oct.] S. P. to the Bailiffs of Yarmouth.—Will move the lords that the vessels that carry the land soldiers may have directions to convoy their ships bound for Dieppe and Newhaven.

449. [p. 201.] 7 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Sends them a copy of the final settlement how and where the soldiers are to embark, sent by the Duke of Monmouth's command from Mr. Lock, the secretary at war. Desires them to dispose of the vessels to each port according to the said distribution of the men, all of whom are to be transported to Dieppe. Those which are to embark at Gravesend will be ready to go on board as soon as the vessels are there, and all the rest at their several ports on the 13th of this month. Desires them further to say what provision of vessels they have made, that orders may be sent to the captains of the respective companies for their repair to the ports [428].

452. [p. 203.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Bertie.<sup>1</sup>—The treasurer of the navy not being in town, the writer puts into his hands the enclosed estimate of the navy for setting forth the fleet next year, to be presented to the lord treasurer.

453. [p. 204.] 9 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—By fresh advice from the secretary at war there will be 80 men more to be shipped at Yarmouth. The sickliness amongst the companies of Lord Peterborough's regiment will not bring their number below 500 [449]. The captain of the Morning Star lost his boat in a late engagement with two capers; he desires another [459]. The vessels now in the Downs, laden with cables and anchors for the French fleet, are ordered back to the buoy of the Nore [438]. As soon as the king returns to town they shall receive his directions in what manner he will have the Saudados<sup>2</sup> gilded [522]. They are to send orders to Portsmouth to have the Hunter cleaned and supplied with stores, and her victuals completed to three months.

As for the want of men in the ships below, desires him to advise what may be done here towards their supply.

457. [p. 205.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Sir John Holmes.<sup>3</sup>—Encloses a commission from the lords for a court-martial. A court-martial being at the same time to be held here, the judge-advocate cannot come to Portsmouth, so they have authority by the commission to provide one upon the place. Recommends Mr. Pitt, of Portsmouth, who has heretofore officiated upon the like occasion. If Captain Grant's irregularities and abuse of his officers and company, and his descending to the [s]uing for pardon to an inferior officer, be true, there is little discipline to be expected from him [327].

458. [p. 206.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Slingsby,<sup>4</sup> Portsmouth.—The matter of the embezzled stores, in which he is concerned as the officer entrusted with them, is before the officers of the navy. He will have full opportunity of defence [438 and 502].

479. [214.] 11 Oct. S. P. to Captain James, Foresight.—Is troubled at his great want of men. The lords are of opinion that 'were captains as careful as they ought in keeping their men, and using them well when they have them,' the service would not suffer so much by letting so many run away upon every ship's coming in to port.

480. [p. 214.] 11 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Nicholson, Lizard sloop.—Directs him to send particulars of the service of John Brown, now a prisoner in Canterbury gaol, who pretends to belong to his ship.

486. [p. 217.] 11 Oct. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>3</sup>—Takes note of what he writes concerning the Nightingale, who is in the Downs with his convoy bound for Dieppe. Desires him to see that the ships designed for the Straits convoy are ready by the time appointed [430 and 450]. Is satisfied with his answer in relation to the Ostender [437], and desires him to excuse his late plainness, it arising from the trouble the Spanish ambassador had given them with his importunity and clamour against their proceeding in impresting the subjects of his master contrary to the terms of the treaty. Desires him to send the enclosed on board the Richmond on her return from the northward, it being to stop her coming up the River and directing her going to Sheerness to refit [473].

487. [p. 217.] 11 Oct. The same to the same.—There being an indispensable necessity of sending a frigate forthwith to Yarmouth for convoying some vessels from thence to Dieppe, with soldiers, which will begin to embark on Monday next, the writer desires him that the Sweepstakes or some other frigate may be speedily put into a condition of sailing, and if she have not men enough, that some may be spared her out of other ships. She is to convoy also any other vessels bound for the coast of Normandy, calling also at Harwich for like purpose; and to return with the vessels, when they have landed the soldiers, to the buoy of the Nore.

As to his proposition of having his son to command her, the writer dares not undertake anything therein, though has heard very well of him. He will hear further from the officers of the navy as to the appraisement of the vessel [515]. He is to hasten again to sea, as well for annoying the enemy's vessels going out as securing those expected from the Straits, especially as the rest of his squadron have been hindered by weather, the Hunter and Morning Star being yet in the Downs.

514. [p. 230.] 16 Oct. S. P. to Sir Thomas Allin<sup>3</sup> and Sir Jeremy Smyth.<sup>4</sup>—The writer transmitted on Tuesday morning to Mr. Speaker<sup>5</sup> their letter touching the disorder among the company of the Cambridge about the method of their pay. His Majesty is of opinion that the pay of the Cambridge being begun, they ought to go through with it in the same method.

Knows nothing of the Monmouth going out this winter, yet thinks she should be graved. Will send them an account of all the ships designed abroad this winter and those that are to stay at home. Is glad they are shortening the charge of the victualling vessels, and wonders how they came to have lain so long and uselessly in pay [526].

515. [p. 231.] 16 Oct. The Lords of the Admiralty to [the Navy Board].—The convoy designed for the Canaries being now laid aside, they are to stop preparations on the ships for sailing by the 25th, and also to forbear issuing the victuals ordered for them, but to continue fitting them for sea in expectation of other service, and in particular to hasten the 2 fireships designed to accompany them, as one is to attend the first convoy to the Straits, and the other the latter. They are to expedite the convoys mentioned in the letter of the 8th [450], except those to the Canaries and the East Country, this last having become unnecessary. Three able merchant ships that may carry from 36 to 40 guns each are to be taken up by them for 6 months certain, and made men-of-war for a voyage to the West Indies.

at Deptford, they are to agree with some of the merchant shipwrights in the Thames to repair 2 or 3 of the 4th rates in their private docks. For the rest of the new ships in building, they are to take care that where any of them cannot be reasonably expected to serve the king at sea the next summer, their despatch give place to repairing the old ships. It is to be an established rule that all ships to be hereafter built are to have one port fewer on each side, the handling of the guns having been found by experience to be much impeded by the nearness of the ports one to another. Also that the late proportion of cabins<sup>1</sup> be for the time to come strictly observed, as well in all new ships hereafter to be built, as upon the old ones where new cabins shall happen to be set up; and that the assignment to the particular officers of each ship be also observed, so that they may enjoy them as of right, without being subject to be dispossessed by the commander without particular warrant, either from a flag officer or the board. They are also to contract with the merchant shipwrights for building 20 fireships of from 200 to 250 tons, presenting an estimate of their cost to the lords and their judgment concerning their dimensions to the king.

The sum of 1,000*l.* a week having been proposed by themselves to the king as what will be needful to give any satisfaction to the seamen and their families in the payment of tickets, and the lord treasurer having promised to do what he can to supply it, they are to consider of the method that will be needful to be established for the due disposing of this sum, and present the same to his lordship for his correction or approval. The Newcastle, to whose company a great arrear is due, is to be paid to 30 September, 1672, and the like as they are able to the rest of the ships not designed to be set forth to sea this present winter.

To meet the dissatisfaction taken by some merchants from a supposed diversion of certain assignments upon the customs from the use of the navy whereunto they were appointed, and the interruption thereby given to the course of their payment for stores delivered to his Majesty, the said merchants be directed forthwith to attend the lord treasurer in order to his giving satisfaction therein. They are to hire for 4 months certain some vessel that is a good sailer and able to carry from 14 to 20 guns, and fit her out as a man-of-war against the capers infesting the western coast. The command of her is to be given to Mr. George Breholt for his late behaviour against the capers in a vessel of his own. They are to order the appraising of the caper of 28 guns taken by Captain Young and brought into Plymouth, and upon satisfaction given to him and his company for the same, to equip her as a 5th rate [508].

The lieutenant will have the benefit of his good report, but 'the most that sticks with' the writer is not his provoking words to his captain, but his concealing so long the captain's misbehaviour and fraudulent dealings in reference to the king, 'without either discovering it himself or using other means of having it known, till this private squabble between him and the captain urged him to it.'

He is not to doubt the writer's continuance to the utmost of his power to secure not only him but everybody else 'in their endeavours of detecting the misdoings of any persons employed in his Majesty's service'; therefore prays him to be 'under no constraint in his proceedings' in the matter now before him about the embezzlement of

As to the backwardness of the pursers to give in their books, 'there is nothing from which I can sooner expect any amendment of it than the putting of that sort of people into a condition of living honestly in their employments (which as they have been hitherto use[d] I could never think they were), and then correcting them with all severity for what they shall be found falsifying their trust in.'

The navy board have orders to take care about the appraisement of his prize [515 and 705].

568. [p. 258.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Reade,<sup>1</sup> Morning Star.—The lords expect a good reason for his putting into Portsmouth contrary to orders, and have directed Commissioner Deane<sup>2</sup> to survey his ship and report on her condition [570].

569. [p. 259.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Mason, Dover.<sup>3</sup>—To make all haste to his station. The lords will call on the commander of the Hunter to explain why he left him without his orders.

570. [p. 259.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>2</sup>—The king is well satisfied in his supplying Count d'Estrées' ship with no more than was just necessary for her safety. Prays him to hasten an account of it to the officers of the navy, that it may be included in the rest of our demands for stores issued to the use of the French fleet [438]. Enclosed are orders to the commander of the Pearl to hasten to his station in the Soundings. The writer has taken a note of what he says towards the further vindication of the late lieutenant of the Reserve [521]. He is to survey the Morning Star and report whether her condition rendered her unfit to keep the sea, there being nothing less than that to excuse her commander's putting into port contrary to his orders, which directed him to the Soundings; he is also to refit her as she may require [568].

571. [p. 260.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Smith.<sup>4</sup>—The lords have called the Tulip dogger from attending on Boston, leaving that service to himself [882].

572. [p. 260.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Langley.<sup>5</sup>—Desires he will 'prefer the serving his Majesty before the gratifying of any particular man's capriciousness.'

573. [p. 261.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Taylor.<sup>6</sup>—Thanks him for his account of the distribution of the soldiers on board the vessels appointed to transport them. As for the light colliers now at Harwich, the convoy with the colliers bound from hence shall call for them. Is glad the soldiers are at last gone, and for the hopes he gives him that they will not be in want of victuals, notwithstanding that the supply expected for them did not arrive before their departure.

574. [p. 261.] 25 Oct. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—They have sent to the lord treasurer a copy of the board's late letter touching the times by which the new ships may with supplies of money and materials therein mentioned be expected to be finished. They have done the like as to the fireships, and do direct them to prepare an estimate, that moneys may be provided for building them at the places and of the lesser dimensions in their said letter; desiring them in the meantime to treat with proper and sufficient builders, that they may be ready to accompany the fleet at their first going forth next year.

575. [p. 262.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Matthews.—To discharge two men imprested by him out of the Hopewell of Wivenhoe, in violation of the lords' protection; for his contempt therein he will hear further.

576. [p. 262.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Nicholson, Lizard sloop, at Yarmouth.—Having acquainted the lords with the condition of his ship by the want of cables and anchors, their pleasure is that he return with her unto Sheerness.

577. [p. 263.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Pitt.—Will remember him as one whom for many years he has known to have served his Majesty painfully and unblameably.

578. [p. 263.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Mr. George Pley, senr.<sup>1</sup>—It has not risen from any forgetfulness or want of regard to the merchants, his neighbours, that the Mermaid has not been sooner with them, or that there is not a stated convoy to attend them, the lords being very ready on all occasions to give the utmost assistance and encouragement they can to trade; but the state of the other parts of the king's service has not hitherto admitted it.

579. [p. 264.] 25 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Captain Roome Coyle<sup>2</sup> having acquainted him that the

<sup>2</sup> Captain Thomas Roome Coyle had been appointed to command the French Ruby in 1672 (supra, vol. i. p. 399). 'Roome' is apparently a second Christian name, rare but not unknown.

Yarmouth is come in from sea to the buoy of the Nore in very ill condition, they are to order her up to such place for refitting as they shall judge most convenient for her despatch and the keeping of her men, so that she may be able to remain abroad this winter.

580. [p. 264.] 25 Oct. S. P. to Captain Eliot.<sup>1</sup>—To come to the buoy of the Nore to be furnished with what he wants.

581. [p. 265.] 27 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The vessels going to the Downs with and for men will meet with the Buck dogger at the buoy of the Nore to convoy them. Either the Nightingale or the Sweepstakes, if returned from Dieppe, shall have orders for going back with them. Thanks them for their answer of the 23rd about the vessels for the horses to be shipped at Dover and the arms to be carried down to Sir William Lockhart's regiment at Deal. They are to hasten the despatch of the first convoy to the Straits, and to that purpose see to the removal of every occasion of delay, and among the rest the despatching away of the victuals, the doing forthwith what is necessary to the Richmond at Sheerness, and that fireship of the two (he supposes the Ann and Christopher) which they design to go along with them; as the Falcon also as soon as she arrives at Portsmouth. They are to hasten the Saudados that she may be ready to go also with this convoy, and in particular the despatch of her gilding, which is said to be most backward [522]. Has moved the king about what the masters of the small vessels propound touching the getting the 50 soli duty remitted to them at their coming to Dieppe, but it seems more trouble than it is worth. The king will be moved in council as they desire about the estimate for the wages and wear and tear to answer the late declaration for victual.

Postscript.—The enclosed report is first come to hand touching the condition of the Holmes. They are to order her to a dock if she requires it [582].

582. [p. 266.] 27 Oct. S. P. to Captain Burton.<sup>2</sup>—He is to follow the board's order as to going into dock or staying at Sheerness [581].

583. [p. 266.] 27 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Hudson, Dover<sup>1</sup> dogger.—Takes notice of his advice concerning the three flyboats brought into Dover. As to his want of gunner's stores, could he be supplied from Dover if he had an order for it? [597] Fears his desire to remain in that station is out of some particular respect to his private profit, as the writer has of late come to understand that those to whom he gives convoy complain of his exacting moneys from them, 'though not under the bare name of convoy-money, yet under another pretence, namely, for . . . giving them sailing orders, a practice newly crept into the navy,' and what he hears of from other parts also. This cannot be justified, nor will it be allowed by the lords.

584. [p. 267.] 27 Oct. S. P. to Sir Thomas Chicheley.<sup>2</sup>—Desires to know whether a vessel at Dover can be supplied there with gunner's stores [597]. If not she must be called into the River.

585. [p. 267.] 27 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Ridley, Woolwich sloop.—As the sloops cannot well keep the sea this winter, the lords have directed them to be paid off and laid up.

Underwritten: 'The like to Mr. Barbor, Bonetta sloop.

'The like to Captain Country, of the Emsworth sloop.

586. [p. 267.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>3</sup>—Heartily wishes his recovery, and thanks him for information of the departure of the Plymouth, Dover, and Dartmouth.

587. [p. 268.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Sir Jeremy Smyth.<sup>4</sup>—The lords are very well satisfied with his great care in the despatch of the pay. He observes very well touching the inabilities he has found in the masters of several of the king's ships, and particularly him of the Yarmouth; they should all be examined by the Trinity House and approved of, before they be held capable of taking charge of a ship of the king's. Desires him to send down a messenger to the buoy of the Nore to know in what condition the Newcastle and Ruby are, (and the Nightingale if come thither from the Downs), to go northward as convoy to ships bound to Hull, Newcastle, and Leith. have stayed very long for convoy, and unless one of these may be presently ready to join with the Drake and Roebuck, now newly come in from the northward, the writer cannot foresee in what time any ships will be in a condition of being spared to serve this occasion.

588. [p. 268.] 28 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—To send down with all possible despatch two months' victuals to the Drake and three weeks' to the Roebuck, both newly arrived in the Hope.

589. [p. 269.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Captain Colt, Hunter.—At his own request and at the instance of Lord Ossory, the king allows him leave to come to town.

590. [p. 269.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Captain Langley.—In a few days some frigates will be appointed to call at Harwich to convoy the ships which are there bound to the northward.

592. [p. 269.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Pitt.—Will mention his case to Sir John Ernle [577, 805].

593. [p. 270.] 28 Oct. Robes Chamber at Whitehall. The Lords of the Admiralty to the Navy Board.—Order to cause the sloops to be laid up and paid off as soon as they shall be enabled with moneys to do the same (except the Spy sloop, which lies on guard in the East Swale).

Signatures: Ormonde, Arlington, Anglesey.

594. [p. 271.] 28 Oct. Robes Chamber at Whitehall. The same to the same.—They are satisfied by their late letter in the necessity of the board's practice of splitting ships' books and tickets while the moneys assigned for the use of the navy were in their application limited to the service of particular years. But that occasion being now over, they conceive that the use now made of it, namely, that of keeping the account of each year's expense in sea-wages distinct, doth not in any benefit that accrues from it compensate the manifold perplexities as well as troubles which indispensably attend it, both to the navy office and the many persons that are thereby driven to long and chargeable delays in the getting of their tickets passed and payments made. They therefore direct the board to 'let fall that practice by letting the books and tickets contain the full time of each man's service' without 'any such splitting or distinction to be made thereon in reference to the difference of years wherein their said service hath been performed [412].'

They approve the board's objection to Sir John Godolphin's<sup>1</sup> account of his disbursements for impressing men, thinking it very unfit that his Majesty should be subject to the paying of pressing charges without satisfaction given him that the men have actually been entered into his service, a circumstance not to be known without a knowledge first had of the ships on board which they were delivered. They desire to know whether he satisfied the board in this point in his last account, and if not, how they came to allow it.

601. [p. 273.] 29 Oct. *S. The king and lords expect that such ships should not insist on present payment, though so soon as the ships bound for foreign service are paid it is the king's purpose that he and the rest employed on the winter guard shall also receive satisfaction. 723. [p. 325.] 22 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Desires the despatch of the Phoenix by the timely sending down her provisions [707, 728]. Her other wants as to her fitting will be soon answered, and his Majesty is 'pressing very much' that she may be ready to take the benefit of the convoy designed for the Straits. Desires an account of the matter complained of touching the store-keeper at Portsmouth, which was long since said to be under their examination. The lords purpose to visit them on Tuesday next in the morning at their office to discourse with them touching the admiral's printed instructions to commanders, and what therein (if anything) may upon debate be thought fit to be corrected or improved. Will not fail to present to the king in council to-morrow in the afternoon their letter touching the inability of the victuallers to answer their late warrants without a supply of money, 'a matter which, if not instantly remedied, will turn extraordinary to the disservice of his Majesty, by causing a stop to the going forth of those ships to the Straits and elsewhere, which have already met with too many delays.' They are to hasten the appraisement of the Plymouth's prize brought into Plymouth, that she may do service against the capers which infest the western coast; and so to satisfy the reasonable importunities of the Plymouth's company for the money they are to receive of his Majesty for her [715]. Understands from Captain Rooth<sup>3</sup> that but 194 men of the 300 men designed for Tangier are come on board the ships at the Nore. How does it come to pass that the victuals for the said soldiers are not yet come down to the ships? Desires him to speak with her master to send the name of the person he recommends to succeed him; also with Captain Skelton<sup>1</sup> about his boatswain, of whom he has lately made great complaint, that if blameable he may be replaced.

746. [p. 339.] 29 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—His Majesty intending to send two companies of soldiers to lie on board the French Ruby before Sheerness, desires them to supply hammaccoes. The Antelope is sent to Yarmouth to fetch the herring ships to the Downs; afterwards she will be ordered into the River, or where else they shall think advisable. The Country's Welfare is ordered up to Woolwich; the lords desire to know what terms she serves on, and their opinion of her usefulness. The Dover dogger is also ordered up to Deptford, she being in want of provisions and other necessaries to enable her to go to sea. Cadiz or Tangier is the place for lodging credit for supplying beverage, &c., for Captain Rooth's ships. The business of the Falcon's neglecting the Swan smack is before the king. Care is also taken for supplying Captain Skelton with another boatswain in case Captain Rooth finds the present officer blameable [745].

His Majesty being acquainted with the case touching the 3 vessels lately come in of those that were taken with the soldiers going over to Dieppe, whereof one is come to the Downs and the other two to Rye, and Sir William Lockhart himself, their colonel, being now going over, and purposing to take such of the said soldiers as he can recover along with him, the board are to dispose of the vessel in the Downs as they please, but are to keep the two at Rye to await Sir William Lockhart's orders there.

They are to speak with Sir Denis Gauden<sup>1</sup> touching those circumstances in the victualling of the Phoenix which the late contractors<sup>2</sup> made difficulty about ; as also about their demanding 3,000*l.* for enabling them to supply the pursers of Captain Rooth's squadron with necessary money, by which the writer presumes is meant what they mentioned yesterday in their paper and discourse to his Majesty and the lords touching moneys needful for enabling them to provide beverage for the fleet when abroad.

him to hasten away what merchant ships bound for the Straits shall come in his way ; but more particularly those bound for Tangier with victuals for the garrison, and the Success, Advice, Sweepstakes, and Olive Branch fireship, bound out for convoys. Of the doggers he mentions the Tulip will be ordered to Wells [743], the Buck to Sandwich [750], and the Dover with the Country's Welfare up the River. As to their being supplied with victuals (as also the Constant Warwick), 'there hath happened of late a very untimely disorder in the business of the victualling of the navy, by which his Majesty's service has in many particulars received great delays therein, both here and in the out-ports,' but he hopes in a little time they will be in order again, though to tell the truth he fears not presently [738, 745, 749].

Flamborough Head, of 40 to 50 guns each, none under 20 [836, 851].

Underwritten: 'The like to the Bailiffs of Yarmouth and Mr. Bowers of Bridlington.'

775. [p. 353.] 2 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Captain Wetwang<sup>1</sup> is gone to Newcastle to attend the collieries, and is designed to continue on the service of convoying that trade this winter season. The hoy laden with a month's provisions for him being sunk in the River, they should be made good to him by others sent in some of the light colliers next bound to Newcastle. The writer cannot find that the business of supplying the fleet going to the Straits with beverage is satisfactorily settled, nor can it be without some 'interfering of accounts' between the late contractors and the present victuallers [738]; he therefore could wish that the late contractors might be pressed to finish the victualling of the Straits fleet. This is but one circumstance of many wherein the late victuallers not completing the warrants already issued, and indeed closing the year's service now so near at an end, may occasion obstruction to the king's service. Those poor workmen in Chatham Yard who by their late coming in to work there have no advantage by the pays last made, they not falling within the time those payments serve for, they are to relieve with board wages as far as they are enabled by moneys to do it. Reminds them of his letter of 17 Oct. [516]; the French commissary is now desiring with some earnestness that the matter may be despatched, he being upon his return to France. The Reserve has but 3 months' provisions on board. The king intends to send her along with the present convoy going to the Straits, and therefore desires that a month's victuals more may be ready to be put on board her so soon as she arrives in the Downs. The Phoenix is come into the Hope, so her victuals and stores should be immediately sent down.

Postscript.—To hasten the hammaccoes for 200 men on board the French Ruby [746].

where, if necessary, he will have a further supply of victuals.

777. [p. 355.] 2 Dec. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>1</sup>—Encloses a complaint against Captain Andrews,<sup>2</sup> of the Falcon, for neglect of the Swan smack going under his convoy to Portsmouth. A regular examination is impossible at present; but desires him upon the coming in of the Falcon to the Downs to obtain an account of the matter under her captain's hand [824].

778. [p. 355.] 2 Dec. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland.<sup>3</sup>—The Leopard is ordered into the River; hopes she will make shift to get thither without any supply of stores, if she have but provisions sufficient. Desires to know what convoys the Bristol is attending from Dover, she being ordered up to Woolwich, and the Monck being in readiness to take them along with her in case there be any vessels bound for Calais. Let the commander of the Monck know that he is to make what speed he can in returning from thence, as he is designed to convoy vessels to Dieppe, which will be ready in the Downs by the time he gets back.

779. [p. 356.] 2 Dec. S. P. to Captain Smith.<sup>4</sup>—Orders are given to Sir Denis Gauden<sup>5</sup> to supply him with victuals from time to time. As for the guns he mentions that are at Boston, an increase in the number of his guns will occasion an increase in his men without any considerable addition to his force, and the lords will not give way to enlarging it, though use will be made of what he says touching the guns for information of the master of the ordnance. Sends a warrant for his boatswain enclosed.

Desires to know the occasion of the Ruby being with him after the Newcastle is gone. The late disorder and change in the victualling [738] have set that affair backward for some time, but the writer hopes it will soon be made up again, and in particular to him and the York. Entreats him to send orders this night to both places for their being ready against the fleet calls, which they may now every day expect, there being nothing now behind-hand but the getting his Tangier ships out of the River [792].

Postscript.—Captain Rooth,<sup>3</sup> of the Swiftsure, writes from the Downs that the victualler at Dover refused to supply victuals, having had no orders.

791. [p. 360.] 4 Dec. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>4</sup>—Received this night a very unwelcome account of the Reserve's incapacity to go to sea, which is so surprising, and will occasion so much disorder in the designment of the ships appointed for convoy and now going out, that he knows not what to think of it [841]. Desires him to consider what can be done for the present fitting her for a voyage to Portugal, whither she is designed, and to report the occasion of this so great disappointment after so many months spent in fitting her for the sea.

792. [p. 360.] 4 Dec. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>5</sup>—Encloses his orders, wherein he will find that his Majesty is so solicitous for his departure as to leave him no occasion of staying after the Tangier ships shall be arrived [790]. Has acquainted Sir Denis Gauden<sup>2</sup> with what he writes about the victualler at Dover [790]; though he means to send his victuals from London, and they are upon their way. the best use he can of the present one ; but if it is unavoidable that he be removed, some able person should be chosen out of the ships with him. Nor will there be time to make particular provision for the soldiers, but the writer will procure an allowance to the chirurgeons of the ships whereon they are, according to practice in the like cases, for their support ; and for what they shall spend of the provision laid in for the ship's company that shall happen to be sick, which cannot come to much in value, he hopes he will be able to supply it abroad out of the contingent money.

798. [p. 361.] 4 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Saudados<sup>1</sup> is to be forthwith paid to Christmas 1672, whereof Mr. Speaker<sup>2</sup> has taken notice, and is, he presumes, in present condition by money to see performed. The king is earnest to have Captain Binning down with his ship, the Swan,<sup>3</sup> at Portsmouth, who only stays to adjust accounts with their board. Desires his despatch. They are to call to a strict account the surviving officers and men of the Anne, lately blown up [799], and the Hester fireship sunk at Sheerness. There is nothing in the late sentence of the court-martial discharging Captain Berry from the command of the Success [745] by which he is incapacitated to receive the wages due to him.

Encloses a copy of an express from Captain Willshaw,<sup>4</sup> of the Reserve, and begs earnestly that if they can conceive any way of preventing the extraordinary disappointment to his Majesty, they will direct it being done [791]. Would be glad to know if they go on in their intention of having the Henrietta up to Woolwich. 'Humbly thanks them for their care' in despatching the hammaccoes down and forwarding the Phoenix. The Antelope shall be ordered into Sheerness. If the vessel in the Downs ordered to Portsmouth for carrying soldiers to Dieppe be not gone, she is to stay to take in what soldiers shall be put on board her by Sir William Lockhart's orders, and to be supplied with victuals for the voyage.

Hopes the money is in the Downs for paying the ships, his Majesty and the lords upon very good reasons pressing with all possible earnestness that the fleet may be gone. The king is pleased with the hopes they have of speeding out the Swan prize from Plymouth. They have done advisedly in directing the York to take under her convoy for Portsmouth the vessels bound thither, and [to] New-haven for soldiers. Desires to hear how those at Rochester proceed in the taking in of men, that when they are all ready at Sheerness or the Nore a convoy may be appointed for them together, the last letters from Chatham saying that there was but one company could be prevailed with to go on shipboard. Should be glad to understand the readiness of the vessels designed for fetching the other part of the soldiers from Harwich.

794. [p. 364.] 5 Dec. S. P. to Mr. Bridgeman.<sup>1</sup>—Not knowing but that Lord Arlington may think fit to send some commands to the consul at Algiers, the writer gives him notice that Captain Rooth is now within few days of sailing [792]. Adds the enclosed order desired by the navy board from his Majesty as lord warden of the Cinque Ports for supplying his service at Chatham with men to be impressed from Feversham and Milton, which lie within the jurisdiction of those ports.

There will now be opportunity enough by the going away of the fleet for the small vessels he mentions to have convoy to Plymouth. 801. [p. 366.] 5 Dec. S. P. to Captain Eliot.<sup>3</sup>—Is greatly afflicted at the misfortune befallen his ship the Anne. The king expects a very strict account from himself and his surviving officers of the occasion of her loss [793], and particularly how so much powder came to be left on board her during her lying in dock, and its being permitted to lie without any commission or warrant officers on board her more than one of the lieutenants and purser. This account should be speedily presented to the king and the lords, as well as to the navy board who are specially charged with the inquiry.

This she must now hourly look out for, that the fleet may not stay in calling for her.

804. [p. 368.] 5 Dec. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>2</sup>—Encloses a list of the provision ships bound for Tangier. To call for that at Spithead [803], as well as that at Plymouth. Needs not to observe to him that his convoys ought not to be made privy to what is respectively provided for them in his instructions till he comes to sea. Wonders they hear not of the Antelope coming to him from Yarmouth with the herring ships.

Has seen some letters 'very fresh' which give notice of a considerable number of capers lately upon the coast of Portugal; he is to provide the best he can for the safety of the ships bound thither. He is to lose no opportunity of sailing from the Downs so soon as ever the Tangier victualling ships are come thither, the concerns of the garrison at Tangier, and the lateness of the year for the return of the men now going out, not admitting of his stay for other merchant ships, to whom the king has already given sufficient warning [792].

Postscript.—'I have read to his Majesty what I have here wrote, who approves of it, and particularly of what relates to your hastening away.' He commands him to add that it is only the victualling ships for Tangier he is to stay for, and not the store-ships.

He is not to stay for more ships from other ports, as if the pilchardmen can bear with that delay they may as well go under Captain Rooth's<sup>6</sup> convoy, without putting the king to the charge of sending his 2 ships on purpose [741, 833]. He is to make no unnecessary stay in his return home, either at Cadiz or elsewhere. To take a victualler at Plymouth under his care, and see her safe into Tangier. Advises him of the capers [804]. Wishes the Mermaid and Hunter were gone to Morlaix, not knowing when the king's affairs would spare the merchants concerned a better convoy. The king approves of his appointing the Morning Star for the colliery trade. He is to forbear sending away the Dartmouth, and the Nonsuch at her return is to stay with her. He writes 'somewhat obscurely' about the Augustine, as if he were sending her to Scilly. If so, let her call at Mount's Bay for what persons and money shall be put on board by Mr. James Millet, of Markesteere, and transport them to Scilly for the pay of the garrison there.

They further press him to the enabling of the officers of the navy by money to go on vigorously in their general preparations for the next year's service, for preventing any surprise that may happen by the early coming forth of the enemy.

Beseeches the board to inquire into the reason of this and remove it. Is daily solicited by land officers about the vessels for the foot soldiers to be carried over into France; entreats an account when and for what vessels, and at what places, convoy is required, that he may see it complied with. It was this day resolved by the lords that the company of the Fairfax should be paid, they being discharged by the court-martial from any share of the blame arising from her miscarriage [346]; the writer understands that the men are very clamorous. In Captain Binning's<sup>1</sup> case, the lords leave it to them to insist on such vouchers to his account as they think reasonable in his case, where the loss of the vessel may be attended with the miscarriage of the papers. The lords approve their care in calling into speedy examination the loss of the Anne [793, 799, 888]. Is informed by Captain Skelton,<sup>2</sup> of the Speedwell, in the Downs, that he is not yet supplied with some pork and pease which were delivered him short at his being in the River; desires them to remedy this, though hopes the fleet will be gone before any supply can be sent him, unless from Dover. Captain Wetwang<sup>3</sup> in the Newcastle and Pyend<sup>4</sup> in the Ruby are in their way as far as Harwich with about 70 sail of light ships bound towards him, but they are stopped upon late advice of 7 Dutch men-of-war discovered at sea from Bridlington, which not being since confirmed, orders are gone to proceed [836].

He will meet with a supply of credit at Cadiz to answer his contingencies and enable him to pay the men their short allowance money [811]. To their infinite surprise as well as great disappointment to the service, the Reserve was, upon her first going out from Portsmouth, 'found by the tauntness of her masts, or by some other defects, wholly unable to bear any sail'; thus he must make use of another ship to supply her room [791 and 842].

Reflecting upon the many months his ship hath spent in her fitting and manning (he thinks not less than 7), under the view of the officers of the yard as well as her own officers, 'none of which ought to be thought within a possibility of being guilty either of so much ignorance or negligence as not timely to discern and rectify any error so obvious as this,' his advice that she is unable to carry sail was the most surprising to him of anything in his whole life he ever met withal. The navy board propounded something towards the present bettering her by getting of her some iron ballast, the issue whereof the writer expects with impatience [841, 885].

Desires to know the number of the pilchard ships that are to go with Captain Young [741]; and particularly how many from each port, and when each parcel of them were in full readiness to be gone, fearing lest his Majesty may have been imposed upon by the merchants at Plymouth, as he hath been here, pretending their ships to be ready to sail and lying for want of convoy, and occasioning thereby great hurrying and charge to the king, when it hath been found that they were not ready; which is the present case with the fleet now in the Downs, not a fourth part of the merchant ships being come to them that are said to expect their convoy.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that some immediate provision be made of a weekly sum of money for the discharge of the said tickets; there being tickets already in the office to the value of above 18,000*l.*, and the number likely still to increase by reason of the great numbers of men turned over from ship to ship, or discharged by ticket.

However what was observed in September last touching his ship's crankness will leave all that then did observe it inexcusable, the writer does not find any blame likely to remain on him [842]. The king has appointed another ship to sail with Captain Rooth in his stead, and him to do the work of it in accompanying the ships bound to Turkey, and to that purpose he is ordered six months' victuals.

886. [p. 405.] 16 Dec. *S. Hopes notwithstanding what is said touching the capers on the French coast, they will bring away the merchant ships in safety. Could the convoy have been made stronger without interruption to the king's service the writer would gladly have endeavoured it. Is heartily sorry for his misfortune in the ship Providence, of Falmouth; advises him to commit his cause to some person better acquainted with the proceedings of the commissioners of prizes.

887. [p. 405.] 16 Dec. *S. The king would be glad to hear of the coming of the herring ships from Yarmouth under the convoy of the Antelope. It afflicts the writer very much to find that the pursers are forced to come down to him without money [828], but hopes it will be supplied by credits at Cadiz.

888. [p. 406.] 16 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king approves of their sending the York to Portsmouth to convoy the vessels bound that way. As to the keeping of soldiers in order<sup>3</sup> at the buoy of the Nore that shall come down thither out of Chatham river after the York is gone,

This day was a complaint made to his Majesty of the hard usage used by the commissioners of the navy . . . to the soldiers now going from hence for France, whom they cause to be shipt but with such ill provision and without convoy, so that wayting so long at sea they fall into calentures and leape into the sea in that frenzy, by which severall of them have been lost' (Letters to Sir Joseph Williamson, Camden Society, new series, vol. ix. p. 99).

the king will not appoint a ship of war on purpose, but advises that the vessel proceed to the Downs, where she will find the Monck and Greyhound bound to Dieppe with other soldiers. The soldiers to be embarked at Newhaven are, as the board proposes, to march to Shoreham, as a more convenient place. The marshal of the admiralty is to take the gunner of the Anne into his custody, for the trial of whom a court-martial is to be held [799, 801]. The Leopard is come out of the Downs as high as Gravesend, where they are to cause her to be surveyed to determine the speediest way of fitting her for a short voyage with Sir John Narbrough's <sup>1</sup> squadron. Her lieutenant (she having no commander<sup>2</sup>) writes word that she is wholly out of provisions. The Monck is to make a trip over with soldiers to Dieppe and so to return to the Downs, where the board should let her victuals be in readiness to meet her. The commander of the Phoenix desires that his men may receive some pay in the Downs before sailing [867].

He is to remain where he is till upon survey the navy board shall determine where he is to refit [888]. Has acquainted them with his want of victuals.

The board is either to continue her in this service or otherwise dispose of her.

'Though I well know that the want of money is the principal occasion of so many of his Majesty's ships remaining in harbour undischarged, yet thinking it not impossible that if the true condition of the said ships were understood as to their want of repairs, and the length of time which (more or less) they will all require before their repairs can be finished, the time will be found so long, and the charge arising from the useless keeping so many ships in victuals and wages will appear so great, that when it shall be made appear to my lord treasurer and my lords of the admiralty, some course will be taken, at any rate to obtain such a sum as might suffice for the cutting off so unanswerable [a] growing charge, I therefore thought it my duty by this word or two to prompt you to the considering whether it might not be useful to have some speedy judgment made of the time within less than which the ships that in the several ports remain in pay cannot be expected to be put in a condition of service. As the masters of the merchant ships which the board are to take up for men-of-war refuse to let their ships to hire to his Majesty unless they may go commanders of them themselves, he has been pleased by Order in Council to authorise the lords to imprest the said ships; which they empower the board to do in such case, in such manner as hath been formerly practised in the navy. They approve of what the board propound, that the Swan prize carry 150 men and 36 guns, and be reckoned a 5th rate [926].

<sup>3</sup> The first experiment with the new milled lead sheathing, in place of the old wooden sheathing, had been made upon the Phoenix at Portsmouth in March 1670-1 (see Cal. S. P. Dom. 1671, p. 274); and this was followed by experiments upon the Dreadnought and Henrietta (Cal. S. P. Dom. 1672, p. 596), Lion (ib.), Harwich, and other vessels. The Phoenix was careened at Sheerness in 1673, after two voyages to the Straits, and was inspected by the king himself. The new method, officially adopted by the order referred to in the text, still failed to find favour with some naval experts, especially Sir John Narbrough and Commissioner Beach, who complained that the action of the lead was to corrode very rapidly the nails and rudder-irons of the ship. Their influence was sufficient to cause a reconsideration of the question, and in 1682 the navy board reported against a further use of lead sheathing (An Account of Several New Inventions and Improvements in a Discourse by way of Letter to the Earl of Marlborough. London, 1691).

The Leopard has but three days' victuals on board, and the Gloucester has had none on board for some days but bread and cheese. 264 recruits with officers are to be shipped at Harwich on 2 January. The Duke of Monmouth thinks it best that Sir Robert Carey's company should be shipped at Portsmouth instead of Shoreham [912]; they are to provide shipping there for 840 men besides officers. A warrant will be issued to the marshal of the admiralty to take the men they speak of into custody, who, together with the business of the George fireship, shall be brought before the present court-martial. They are therefore to hasten down their provisions and stores, completing their victuals to 4 months. Having been this day with Sir John Narbrough and Commissioner Haddock<sup>2</sup> by the king's special command down at Woolwich to confer with the captains of the ships bound out under Sir John Narbrough<sup>3</sup> [962], they find not only a considerable part of their carpenter's work unfinished on some of them, but their victuals entirely wanting to almost all. The greatest want of all is men, and it is the king's pleasure that the men lately ordered to be paid off may not be paid on board or at the office, but upon some or other of the ships now going out, that so their service for the present expedition may be secured.

P. to Mr. Gold.*<sup>1</sup>—Upon some fresh advice from Spain [958], it is resolved that the Plymouth and Dover shall not go alone, but stay for Captain Rooth.<sup>2</sup> This determination is calculated for the safety of the whole of the merchants' concernments, though the writer fears it may not be found equally convenient for particular interests.

977. [p. 442.] 26 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Understands from Sir William Jennens<sup>3</sup> that the Gloucester is capable of being despatched in time [975] provided she can get her victuals and about 80 or 100 men more. Desires them to press with all earnestness the sending down of the victuals, she being now at Gravesend or the Hope. 'For men, besides what he shall be able to do by his press-warrants, there seems no way open but that the men that are to be discharged out of the ships lately ordered to be paid off may be invited down to the Gloucester and Mary Rose, and what other of the ships of those now going out are in want thereof, by a promise of being paid their arrears when they come on board.' To which purpose the writer desires an estimate of what moneys shall be needful for the paying off of the said ships, and discharging the tickets that shall be in the hands of particular men therein. They are to hasten what boat-swain's and carpenter's stores of the Gloucester are yet behind. The like despatch is to be used for Sir John Narbrough's fleet, some of which are not yet furnished in their carpentry [975]. They must be supplied with men the same way, but above all their provisions seem most backward. Let Captain Perriman<sup>4</sup> see what small vessels are in the River in the king's pay that may be applied to the present pressing and receiving of pressed men. Again reminds them of finishing the account of moneys to be demanded of the French ambassador [775].

speedily give them an answer to what they desire about the Hopeful Margaret<sup>1</sup> dogger at Portsmouth. 'It is true the year is far spent, and the service is likely to call very suddenly for the fresh manning of the ships, and so your advice seems very reasonable for the withholding the present payment of their companies; but, on the other hand, while the companies of those ships riding uselessly in pay do expect to be paid off before they go to sea (as I fear they generally do), and that other ships now ready to go abroad cannot proceed for want of men, it seems so far advisable that if the present paying off the men from the ships they are now upon will invite them to the present manning of those going out, they should presently be paid, which I pray you to consider of and give me your advice concerning it.'

Will write to Captain Lanyon<sup>2</sup> about the ballast business, and thanks them for their answer about a master for the Norwich. Received such an account at Woolwich on Wednesday [975] of the Leopard's defects from her commander and Mr. Pett,<sup>3</sup> the shipwright, that her present service is not to be expected of her; desires to know whither she shall be ordered for her general repair. Orders already sent for the refitting the Deptford ketch at Sheerness. The Duke of Albemarle's and the Earl of Carlisle's regiments, designed for Ireland, are to march to Chester; desires their opinion how vessels may be provided there for transporting them to Dublin. The lieutenant of the Princess, newly come to the Nore, will attend them that they may know her defects; if she may be despatched without bringing her into a dock, Sheerness will be the properest place for her coming in, she being designed for one of the ships appointed for a standing convoy to the colliery this winter.

979. [p. 445.] 26 Dec. *S. Postscript.—Recommends particularly to his care the Ark, at Plymouth, bound with necessaries for the garrison at Tangier.

981. [p. 446.] 27 Dec. *S. He is to appoint 2 or 3 small frigates to see the Duchess of Modena<sup>5</sup> safe over from Dover to Calais [1012]. He is also to send one of the small frigates to Dover to convoy Sir William Lockhart over to Calais, and to appoint some frigate to fetch from Rye some vessels with shot and guns, whereof there is great want in the office of the ordnance.

987. [p. 449.] 30 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has sent a warrant to the master shipwright at Chatham for pressing carvers [944]. His Majesty doth greatly press for the despatch of Sir John Narbrough's<sup>1</sup> squadron, so the writer is earnestly to repeat it to them that victuals and all stores may be forthwith sent on board. Volunteers are not to be turned over from ships to be paid off into those going out without their own consent, 'his Majesty thinking it a great moment to his service that his promise be made good to them therein' [255]. Has moved for the warrant some time since to be granted by the king as lord warden [981] for seizing on the men of Milton, Feversham, &c., that have deserted the service at Chatham. They shall speedily receive the king's warrant in writing, pursuant to what he in their presence the other day determined touching the bearing the masters of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd rates [972]. Captain Wetwang,<sup>2</sup> of the Newcastle, writes that 'in the last bad weather which he had his mainsail is blown to pieces, and the outermost cable of his best bower so rotten that it cannot be trusted to.' Desires that these may be sent him, he intending suddenly to come to the southward, and so will probably have an opportunity of taking them on board at the River's mouth. They are to inquire about the wants of the Little Francis fireship, now at Sheerness, which lies in a very ill condition.

993. [p. 451.] 30 Dec. S. P. to Captain Wetwang,<sup>7</sup> Newcastle, at Newcastle.—Has received his from Leith Road and has made known his wants to the navy board [987]. Encloses a copy of his justification, and has sent him a copy of his certificate against him. The king approves of what he has done touching the Falcon, whose commander he hopes will be careful to fall in with his fleet ; as also his proposition for a ship to cruise between the Foreland and the Kentish Knock, and will put it in execution so soon as he has a ship to spare. Is glad the report which hath been very hot in town for 24 hours past is untrue, which would needs have had the Foresight carried away into Holland by the mutiny of her company.

ADMIRALTY

FROM JANUARY 1, 1673-4, TO DECEMBER 31, 1674

[Vellum folio, as described on p. 1. Press mark No. 2850. Ledger index, 62 pp. ; 428 written pp. The letters in this volume are written from Derby House, unless otherwise stated.]

998. [p. 1.] Whitehall. 1 Jan. S. P. to Colonel Piper,<sup>1</sup> Plymouth.—Desires him to permit such person as shall be appointed thereto by Mr. William Martin, merchant, at Plymouth, to repair on board the Susanna of Weymouth, lately retaken by the Dartmouth, laden with oranges and lemons, and there to remain on behalf of the merchants concerned in her lading, for the present securing the same from being embezzled. Thanks him for his advices concerning Evertsen, &c. So soon as the Mermaid and Hunter come back, what he mentions of the ships at Falmouth bound to Rouen and London will be remembered.

999. [p. 1.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Washbourne, Stavoreen, Downs.—Is sorry for his being unprovided of a purser, the more for the reason of it—the ill-usage which Mr. Page, his purser, tells him that both himself and steward have received from his lieutenant, which the writer is very apt to believe to be too true, since he was yesterday with him to desire for that reason to be discharged of his employment, as being not longer able to bear the wrong. If true, no little part of the blame will reflect upon him, whose duty it is to support his inferior officers against any injuries offered them from their superiors. For with what reason can it be expected that any other person that is worth the employing will be contented to come in his room after his being known to have left his place upon the terms he doth? The writer has received such a character of him from the navy office as one that hath duly passed his accounts, that he thought it fit to invite him to return to his ship, but cannot persuade him to it and therefore must endeavour to find another. Desires a true account of the occasion of this discontent [1023].

1000. [p. 2.] Whitehall. 1 Jan. S. P. to Sir William Jennens,<sup>1</sup> Gloucester, in the Hope.—To hasten to the Downs, where he hopes that without any violence the merchant ships will for their own sakes be persuaded to part with a man or two to enable him to keep them company, at least so far as to increase his number of men to what it was in the last Dutch war, namely 280.

1001. [p. 3.] Whitehall. 1 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has just received advice from Mr. Lock, secretary at war, that 8 companies of the Earl of Carlisle's regiment and 8 more of the Duke of Albemarle's are ordered to march to Chester to be embarked for Ireland, consisting of about 60 soldiers in each company, besides officers, who may probably be at Chester in expectation of their embarking about a month hence. Desires them to provide shipping and to state the charge thereof, and what ready money (if any) will be necessary. The Princess at the Nore has but 4 days' provisions, which they are to see supplied, and as soon as they have any return from those appointed to survey her, they are to inform the writer to what place they think fit to dispose of her that he may provide orders for her sailing. 2,000 hammaccoes to be sent down to the Henrietta in the Hope, there to be delivered to the boatswain, to be by him indented for and disposed of as Sir John Narbrough shall direct.

1002. [p. 3.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Wright,<sup>2</sup> Nonsuch, Plymouth.—To lose no time in refitting and getting out to sea again to his station.

<sup>2</sup> Captain Lawrence Wright : Pepys's Register mentions three other officers of the same surname (supra, vol. i. pp. 427-8).

1003. [p. 3.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Young,<sup>1</sup> Plymouth.—Thanks him for his advice touching Captain Cuttance's good fortune in escaping the caper and bringing away some of his men, as also for the Dartmouth retaking the Susanna of Weymouth [998]. He is to cause her and the Nonsuch to make what despatch they can out to sea.

1004. [p. 4.] Whitehall. 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Pinn, Dartmouth, Plymouth.—To make haste to his station.

1005. [p. 4.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Killigrew,<sup>2</sup> Monck, Downs.—To forbear to proceed to Dieppe, but to put the soldiers on board him on some other of the vessels employed for transporting of soldiers, and to put his ship in a condition of obeying what further orders he may daily expect.

1006. [p. 4.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Harris,<sup>3</sup> Constant Warwick, Downs or Dover.—If he can make shift to reach Rye while the wind remains as it is, and bring away the vessels there bound for the River, without any considerable loss of time to his convoys, his Majesty will reckon it a very good service, there having lain long some stores at Rye for want of convoy which the service stands in great need of.

1007. [p. 4.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Langley.<sup>4</sup>—Immediately to repair up hither to receive some commands from the king wherein despatch is necessary; 'so that if you can bear it I would advise you to come up post' [1153].

1008. [p. 5.] Whitehall. 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Lhostein,<sup>5</sup> Antelope, Sheerness.—His pilot to be still kept in safety till opportunity present for his trial at a court-martial. The king consents to his coming up for a few days as soon as his ship is out of the dock again. Doubts not that he has informed the officers of the navy with the service the boats did for him for which he desires suitable rewards. Congratulates him on bringing in his ship without more damage after the great hazard he was lately in.

1009. [p. 5.] [Whitehall.] 1 Jan. S. P. to Captain Watts, Augustine, Nore.—His Majesty having some service upon which he would continue him abroad for a month or six weeks before he comes in, it is his pleasure that he immediately give the writer notice of the condition of his ship.

Underwritten: 'A duplicate of this sent to the Hope.'

1010. [p. 5.] [Whitehall.] 2 Jan. S. P. to Sir John Maynard.<sup>1</sup>—To attend the lord keeper at his house in Lincoln's Inn Fields to-morrow at 3.

Underwritten: 'The like to Mr. Attorney-General and Mr. Solicitor.'

1011. [p. 6.] Whitehall. 2 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Desires, for the use of the French commissary [977], an authentic duplicate of the account of stores enclosed in theirs of yesterday, as also vouchers to prove the truth of our demands, if the board concur in thinking that he will expect them. The writer is by his Majesty's command, with the assent and advice of the lord treasurer, to let them know that 'in order to the speedier manning of the ships now hastening out under Sir John Narbrough, and upon which, though the full complements appear by the clerk of the check's returns to be for the most part borne on the respective books, yet not a quarter part of the whole appear either to do service on board or answer to their musters, the absence of the rest being imputed to their attendance in town for the procuring, examining, or payment of their tickets,' the board do by all convenient means forthwith make it known that whatever seamen shall repair on board any of the ships belonging to Sir John Narbrough's squadron now in the River, and named in the margin, shall have their tickets immediately paid on board the said ships respectively, the lord treasurer having promised 5,000*l.* or 6,000*l.* for this occasion; and that for the more effectual carrying seamen down to the ships, the board are to respite the payment of tickets here until these ships be manned. Presses them to hasten the getting forth of the ships to sea by despatching down their provisions and stores, and requiring from the officers a strict account of their attendance and industry.

Margin: 'Henrietta, Mary Rose, Greenwich, Crown, Hampshire, Assistance, Portsmouth, Dover dogger, Peterman dogger, Country's Welfare, Fortune flyboat. Sloops:—Vulture, Hound, Lizard, Bonetta, Wivenhoe, Hawk, Jason.'

1012. [p. 7.] Derby House.<sup>1</sup> 3 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>2</sup> Downs.—Hopes ere this he has been applied to by the muster-master at Deal for the number of merchantmen now in the Downs outward bound, 'in order to the computing the true number of men likely to be carried out with them'; if not, desires him 'immediately to fall upon causing it to be done.' Which he presumes the masters of the vessels will make less difficulty of permitting in case he shall let them know that 'it is not in order to the depriving them of any of their men, but for some other reason, and in particular to know the force of the fleet to defend itself in case of meeting with the enemy; and to that purpose it may not be unuseful to demand also their number of guns, the better to disguise' the inquiry, as also the port to which they are or pretend severally to be bound. This trouble is occasioned by the imperfectness of the lists daily received from Deal [1019 and 1036]. Takes notice of what he writes concerning the captain of the Buck dogger, and sending the Speedwell and Richmond to attend the Duchess of Modena<sup>3</sup> [981], as also concerning the Foresight. Authority for holding a court-martial shall be speedily sent him, 'it being matter of much trouble to consider how all discipline and obedience seems at this day to be laid aside.'

1013. [p. 8.] 3 Jan. S. P. to Captain Young,<sup>4</sup> Plymouth.—Is satisfied in what he writes touching his not having lost, as was suggested, the benefit of a late wind. Encloses his Majesty's warrant concerning the Dover. Desires an account of the names, masters, guns, and men 1015. [p. 8.] 3 Jan. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>2</sup>—Is sorry the Mermaid and Hunter have met with such contrary winds, but hopes ere this they are upon their way home-wards.

1016. [p. 9.] Sunday, 4 Jan. S. P. Lord Brouncker.<sup>3</sup>—Has perused his certificate. Desires him to add the sums which will strictly answer the questions following: What was the general debt of the navy upon 14 July last? What hath been the general debt thereof contracted from that day to 31 Dec.? What hath the treasurer of the navy's receipts between the said days in general amounted to? The like touching the general value of his payments within the said time. The value of the moneys remaining in the treasurer of the navy's hands on the said 31 Dec., not assigned away for past goods and services, but applicable to future services and supplies of stores. The debt of the navy upon the said 31 Dec. under its particular heads, with the value of the whole. Desires the information to-morrow before noon.

1017. [p. 9.] 5 Jan. S. P. to Captain Watts.<sup>4</sup>—To deliver to Captain Edward Cotterell<sup>4</sup> what logwood and other concerns of his own are on board his ship.

Rooth,<sup>1</sup> Downs.—Thanks him for his advice of the losing and retaking of two of the vessels from Rye [1025], though it seems matter of much wonder to his Majesty by what negligence they could be taken between Rye and the Ness. His Majesty approves of what he has done in sending out the Bonadventure and Success to look out for the Speedwell, and intercepting of the three capers. Encloses orders for one of the Bilbao ships to attend the vessel which will shortly be in the Downs laden with the French ambassador's goods to Havre de Grâce, from whence she is to repair to Plymouth, there to stay for the arrival of him and his fleet, as her consort and the merchant ships bound to Bilbao are to stay there for her in case he shall be got thither, and proceed on his voyage before her despatching her work at Havre de Grâce and getting to Plymouth [1037]. His next will bring him a commission for holding a court-martial. His Majesty's care being in an especial manner exercised at this day in the considering how to strengthen his fleet in regard of what may reasonably be apprehended from the strength of the enemy upon the Spanish coasts, he offers him the addition of the Constant Warwick if he finds her in present condition to accompany him; orders for supplying her with victuals shall go to Dover to-morrow. Desires him, in case the St. Peter galliot shall arrive in the Downs before the departure of the Greyhound, to give orders to her commander to take her under convoy, together with the other vessels formerly mentioned to Captain Clements bound to Rouen, and seeing the said galliot safe to Havre de Grâce, to stay for her taking in some wine for his Majesty (but not exceeding 48 hours), and bring her back to the Downs.

Expects with impatience his list of ships and men [1012, 1037], 'it being of great moment to the king and his service (especially with regard to the judging how the next year's fleet will be manned) that the numbers of men now going out may be thoroughly known, and conjecture made what part of them may be expected timelily at home again, and what not.' The writer is by special direction from the king to admonish him to keep his force together as much as may be. To this end he is to instruct the Portugal ships to see their convoys safe into their ports with as little loss of time as may be, and from thence to join him again at Lisbon or Cadiz, or where else he may direct.

1020. [p. 11.] 6 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Desires them to order the Constant Warwick victuals from Dover [1019].

1021. [p. 12.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Lock.<sup>1</sup>—His Majesty, having been informed of several disorders lately happening between the press masters and some seamen, 'who are said to assemble themselves mutinously in bodies from day to day, not only to the interrupting but assaulting and wounding the said press masters in the execution of their duties, has resolved upon having some soldiers appointed from day to day for the preventing the growth of the said disorders, and commanded me to give you the substance of the warrant which he would have forthwith provided and sent to the Lieutenant of the Tower (if it could be) to-night, that they may be at work to-morrow.'

1022. [p. 12.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Sir Thomas Chicheley.<sup>2</sup>—The guns of the Hampshire are said to remain still at Chatham, while the ship lies in the Hope (as she hath for some time done) in daily expectation of them, and very forward in everything else.

Postscript.—Since the closing of this, a letter is come to hand from the captain of the Constant Warwick and Little Spragge, which were sent convoy to his guns and shot, which gives an account of the unfortunate miscarriage of one of his vessels, notwithstanding both the force and care of the convoys [1019, 1025].

1023. [p. 13.] 6 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—They may expect very speedily warrants for impresting the caulkers and shipwrights they desire for carrying on the works at Chatham. The business of the dogger that is said to have misbehaved herself in permitting a merchant ship to be taken off the Foreland is in examination; and though the master of the merchant ship is by all acknowledged to be no less in blame, he will ere long find marks of his Majesty's displeasure laid upon the master of the dogger. The Leopard is ordered up to Woolwich as they advise, but where is the Princess to be refitted? The king and lords approve their scheme of the numbers and distribution of the tenders for the next year's fleet; as also what they have very reasonably observed about 'the extravagant charge his Majesty hath of late been exposed to by commanders expecting (even as low as those of the 5th rate) the taking up of vessels on purpose to enable them to press'; and they concur with what they propound as the better method of providing seamen—the employing persons at the several ports for the impresting and collecting of men to be sent to the fleet when occasion requires. The lords agree with their proposal to have the William dogger victualled from time to time at Lynn.

What was discoursed of yesterday between them and the writer at their board, upon his attending them by order of the king and lords to that purpose, supersedes so much of what was lately designed touching the transferring of the men out of the 4 ships ordered to be paid off unto Sir John Narbrough's fleet. His Majesty approves what was then agreed on—'that the moneys designed for the inviting of the seamen to go down thereto with promise of having their tickets paid at their arrival on board [1011], should be sent down by some yacht as low as the Henrietta, and there kept on float to be disposed of to the several ships of Sir John Narbrough's fleet, as upon advice the persons attending the pay shall understand that men are come down and actually entered on board the said ships respectively in expectation of payment of their tickets for past service.' The lords approve their sending away an anchor and cable to the Newcastle, and of the Old Francis having some repairs done to her. Has put into the French commissary's hands the account of his Majesty's loans of stores for the use of the French fleet, who will attend Mr. Surveyor for seeing the vouchers and receipts [1011]. Desires a further account of the gunner of the Ruby's neglect, since all that is yet said by the two shipwrights will not amount to any conviction, they having not averred that either the barrels by them mentioned were powder barrels, or that there was powder in them. Thanks them for their account of the small vessels.

The purser of the Stavoreen [999, 1026, and 1043] undertakes to show that he hath actually taken up and satisfied for out of his purse for 3 months' necessaries for a 3rd rate, so as that he plainly denies to provide any more and refuses to have anything more to do with his employment. Beseeches the board to bring the matter to a settlement.

The king and lords are acquainted with their opinion touching Sir John Duteil's<sup>1</sup> proposition of having some soldiers employed upon the galleys, and they will be provided from Tangier. The king also approves their proposition touching some seamen to be put on board the galleys. Desires them to order victuals to the Monck, one of Sir John Narbrough's squadron; she had but 14 days' provisions on board on the 4th inst. The master of the Hind dogger writes very earnestly for some increase to his number of men, urging not only that he is allowed but 12 while other doggers have 36 and 30, but that by this scarcity he was constrained lately to lose his boat; desires them to consider this [1045]. Hopes care is taken for sending down money to the Gloucester, now gone into the Downs. The king hath commanded him to press them to despatch the 3 merchant ships some time since ordered to be imprested into his service, as also the St. David, all that may be.

1024. [p. 15.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Dawson.<sup>2</sup>—Captain Rooth will supply him with an able master for Smyrna when he comes to Cadiz [1025].

1025. [p. 16.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>3</sup> Downs. —Captain Dawson, of the Advice, declares the inability of his master to take upon him the charge of the ship to

<sup>1</sup> Sir John Baptiste Duteil was a French gentleman who had been appointed in 1671 to take charge of the two galleys that had been built at Genoa and Leghorn for the king (Cal. S. P. Dom. 1671, p. 325). He had been already concerned in the building of the galleys (ib. 1670, pp. 178, 325; Corbett, England in the Mediterranean, ii. 76), and was appointed to the command of the Leghorn galley, which was successfully armed and equipped before the end of 1674 (ib. ii. 77). There is a reference to its expected arrival at Tangier in No. 2043, infra. He is sometimes referred to as the 'Sieur Duteil,' and it is possible that 'Sir' may be a corruption of this, and not an English knighthood.

Smyrna ; he is therefore to supply another out of his fleet [1024]. Hopes he will by this post receive the commission he desires for enabling him to hold courts-martial, being more sorry than surprised to find what he writes touching the want of respect given to his orders as commander-in-chief, and particularly in the Richmond coming away from Calais, contrary to his directions, without the order of the captain of the Speedwell, 'concerning which I shall not fail to do my duty by the grace of God (whomsoever it offends) in laying it before his Majesty, so as that I hope our young commanders will see his Majesty will countenance no such breach of discipline.' Is sorry to find by a letter from the captain of the Constant Warwick that one of the vessels with guns and shot from Rye is carried away by the enemy notwithstanding his and Captain Broad's<sup>1</sup> letter to him, and his to the writer, intimating their retaking both [1019, 1022, 1190].

1026. [p. 16.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Washbourne, Stavoreen.—The writer's readiness [to listen to his purser] [1023] was only that of hearing any man's complaints 'at a time when (the more is the pity) nothing is more ordinary than of the superior officers oppressing inferior, not to their wrong only but to the great disservice of his Majesty.' Is sorry for the great difference between his reckoning and the purser's, who appeals to his vouchers. Desires him not to rely on his steward only, but to examine the true state of his stores, and inform Sir Jeremy Smyth<sup>2</sup> or the navy board.

1027. [p. 17.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Sir William Jennens.<sup>3</sup>—Thanks him for discharging the young man in answer to his desire, though sorry to find they were misinformed concerning his age and ability, he being reported to be but 14 years old, and in no capacity of doing service. The navy board will send down money for his ship to the Downs. As to the order he demands for requiring a man out of every merchant ship, it is what hath at no time been done, and the consequence of it may be ill ; he is therefore to rest upon what he may obtain by courtesy and argument, showing it to be the merchants' interest to put him into condition of serving them, and not attempt anything by violence.

1028. [p. 18.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Preistman.<sup>1</sup>—Understanding as well his arrival in the Downs before the Speedwell, as what happened to her after his departure by her being attacked by some of the enemy's men-of-war and forced to cut her cable, the writer desires an account by what order he left the Speedwell [1025 and 1038].

1029. [p. 18.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Perriman.<sup>2</sup>—He is to revictual from time to time at Lynn [1023]. To be more particular in his charges against the person of whom he complains.

1030. [p. 18.] 6 Jan. S. P. to Captain Skelton.<sup>3</sup>—They are all very glad of his escape from the enemy, but desires to know how it came to pass that he was left by the Richmond [1028 and 1038].

1031. [p. 19.] 7 Jan. S. P. to Captain Turner,<sup>4</sup> Jason fireship, Hope.—Encloses a press warrant, and desires him to follow Sir John Narbrough's orders.

1032. [p. 19.] 7 Jan. S. P. to Captain Watts, Augustine, Nore.—He is to receive 3 months' victuals to go out again with Sir John Narbrough.

1033. [p. 19.] 7 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will send the king's resolution concerning the soldiers both in the Downs and at Harwich. His Majesty intends the Augustine shall go out with Sir John Narbrough; they are to use all possible despatch in revictualling her, as also in refitting the Antelope and Princess at Sheerness.

1034. [p. 20.] 7 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Hudson,<sup>5</sup> Dover dogger, Hope.—'Unless within two days after notice hereof, and application to you by the merchants concerned . . . you do put into a way of arbitration the business in difference between yourself and the merchants who lately complained of you to their lordships, so as that they may receive full satisfaction from you before the ships under Sir John Narbrough be ordered forth, of which number you are one, the lords are resolved to displace you . . . the merchants having propounded to stand to the determination of any two indifferent men, one to be chosen by them and the other by you ; and in case of their not determining it, the merchants, with their lordships' approbation, do declare their readiness to submit to my umpirage, which I am not desirous to take upon me, but do for your own good advise you to let the lords see your readiness to bring it to a fair conclusion.'

1085. [p. 20.] 7 Jan. S. P. to Captain Harris,<sup>1</sup> Constant Warwick, Downs.—The king 'seems greatly unsatisfied by what neglect the vessels coming from Rye should be snapped by the enemy' [1025].

1086. [p. 20.] 8 Jan. S. P. to Mr. St. Michel,<sup>2</sup> Deal.—Thanks him for his of the 4th with the account of the ships in the Downs, which he is apt to believe comes near the truth in regard of its differing not above 3 or 4 ships from the list since received from Captain Rooth [1012]. Desires him to thank Mr. Neale<sup>3</sup> also for his share therein.

1087. [p. 21.] 8 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>4</sup> Swiftsure, in the Downs.—Thanks him for his pains in answering his desires about the number of merchant ships with their guns and men now in the Downs outwards bound [1019]. The king is very well pleased, 'noting in particular how much the wor[l]d's discourse is mistaken, that reckon no less than 8,000 men now going abroad with this fleet that will not be at home to do his Majesty any service this next summer ; whereas the whole number of men contained in both your lists amounts to but 3,354, and of those about 1,750 that may reasonably be expected home time enough for that use, as being on ships bound no further than Tangier at farthest, so that the number which are likely to be lost by the merchant ships will be about 1,605 men, to which adding 1,500 for the convoys attending them, the whole of the men lost for the next summer's service out of the fleet in the Downs . . . is but about 3,105, which will be lessened also somewhat by the coming home of several merchant ships now homewards bound, waiting for convoy at Tangier ; which I mention not but that I wish there were fewer, but that I cannot but be glad that the continuing of trade abroad, the stopping the clamour of the poor workmen at home, and the securing to his Majesty the custom that will arise by so considerable a fleet, will be compassed with the absence of about 3,000 men.'

Hopes in God money will come down time enough to pay the Gloucester. Has moved his Majesty about what he writes touching his lieutenant, and could wish he had sent word whether he be his first or second lieutenant. If he has any worthy person in his eye near him that he would recommend, the king hath that reliance upon the justness of his choice as that he will send him a commission down for him [1070]. It is not his Majesty's meaning that the Bilbao ship should stay behind him in case the wind should serve him and he sail before the French ambassador's goods come down, but only in case that vessel comes before he sails that then one of the Bilbao convoy do endeavour to carry her into her port, and so to repair to Plymouth [1019]. Has sent to Dover for victuals for the Constant Warwick. Desires him to see that the Greyhound have instructions about going to Havre de Grâce with the vessels that will apply themselves to him for convoy thither [1019]. The king approves his appointing the Bonadventure to convoy over the Cleveland yacht with the French ambassador to Calais.

1038. [p. 22.] 9 Jan. S. P. to the same.—In answer to something he lately wrote to Captain Preistman and Captain Skelton [1028 and 1030], the latter tells the writer 'that he did tell Captain Preistman that as the wind and tide then were he did think it fit to come to an anchor,' while, on the contrary, Captain Preistman tells him 'that he did not think it convenient, and receiving no orders from Captain Skelton to the contrary did make the best of his way to the Downs.' Desires him to examine both commanders.

The officers of the navy will provide credit from the Turkey Company for the supply of the Advice and Sweepstakes with provisions and necessaries, if they should be taken short of either of them when abroad. The king approves his care in sending out the Adventure and Nightingale to look after the Dutch capers in the Narrow [1070]. Believes that Colonel Strode or his deputy at Dover<sup>1</sup> may have received the warrant for impressing of men for his fleet, and that it may lie in their hands unexecuted for want of some person to solicit it; it may be worth a message thither to know [1069 and 1070].

1039. [p. 23.] 9 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Cooper, Spy sloop, in the East Swale.—Forasmuch as the principal intent of his Majesty in his late order for prohibiting oysters to foreign parts was the removing that pretence by which strangers have been so reasonably suspected to have come into Feversham Water and thereabouts for making discoveries, he is only to continue to see the orders executed of having bond taken by the custom officers for their not being exported to any foreign parts, the surmise of that pretence of carrying them into an English port and from thence abroad being not ground enough to stay any vessel from going to fish who will be contented to enter into the same bond [1352].

1040. [p. 23.] 9 Jan. S. P. to Captain Clarke,<sup>1</sup> York, Downs.—In case the wind should come fair for his going to Portsmouth before the return of the Greyhound, he is himself to convoy the Greenwich pink to Rye as he passes by.

1041. [p. 24.] 9 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Hopes they will provide credit for the Advice and Sweepstakes from the Turkey Company [1038]. Takes notice of the letter from the Downs touching the soldiers, 'as well in relation to their mutinous behaviour to the master of the vessel as the necessities which I fear do but too reasonably provoke them to it.' Knows not a remedy, but that as soon as the Greyhound comes back from Calais she is ordered to convoy them over. As to victuals, the writer cannot guess how they came short of all other species and have only bread and cheese remaining, but prays them to send orders to Dover for furnishing the vessel with a month or two's provisions.

1042. [p. 24.] 9 Jan. S. P. to Sir R. Munden.<sup>2</sup>—Will speak once more to his Majesty for a supply of soldiers for him, though at his late doing it he seemed unwilling to spare any in hopes that seamen may be gotten; but since he gives them so little hopes of his gaining a sufficient number of them, the writer presumes his Majesty may be prevailed with to let him have some soldiers.

1043. [p. 25.] 9 Jan. S. P. to Lieutenant Tosier, lieutenant of the Stavoreen.—‘I have been noways inclined to any undue thoughts concerning you in the execution of the employment you are in, more than that upon the purser’s complaint, and his seconding it with a desire of having leave to surrender his employment (which I never knew any purser till now do), I could not, nor can still (to tell you the truth), believe that he hath done it without some reason of easing himself by it, and avoiding some evils which he had rather forfeit the benefit of his office for, than continue to suffer. However, I shall not go about to prejudge you, but only inform you that Captain Rooth hath a commission for the holding of courts-martial, and that it seems to me more conducing to the weal of his Majesty’s service that in the presence of a flag officer you should inform him and procure punishment to an offender by a regular course, than take upon you the judging and correcting of the miscarriage of an under officer where the judgment of a flag can be so easily recurred to’ [999].

1045. [p. 26.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Captain Marshall,<sup>2</sup> Hind dogger, at Harwich.—For an increase in his number of men, must refer him to the navy board [1023].

1046. [p. 26.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Captain Young,<sup>3</sup> at Plymouth.—Thanks him for his care to give suitable instructions to Captain Mason.<sup>4</sup> The king approves his sending the Dove dogger along with the convoy coming with the African. Hopes to receive the account of the ships he promised, it being much wanted in order to the comparing it with those going out from hence, and thereby judging of the number of men going abroad at this time in merchantmen [1037].

1049. [p. 27.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, at Plymouth.—The lords have several days since appointed a complement of men and guns for his ship. Presses him to make despatch in getting her in a readiness for the sea.

1050. [p. 27.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Robert Wetwang, at Newcastle.—Hopes his father<sup>2</sup> is advanced a good way hitherwards.

1051. [p. 27.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Captain Clarke,<sup>3</sup> Well dogger, at Plymouth.—Has received his of the 7th from Portsmouth and hopes this will find him arrived at Plymouth. The king did give the salvage of a vessel retaken by the Plymouth to Captain Young [508], but he has not made it a standing rule. But if he apply to him by petition as Captain Young did, he and his company may be gratified.

1052. [p. 28.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>4</sup> Downs.—The enclosed gives the result of his Majesty's commands on the advices from Lisbon and Oporto of the strength of the enemy upon the coasts of Spain and Portugal. Further directions will be sent him after the debate upon the subject thereof to-morrow at council. In the meantime his Majesty will insist upon having his fleet enforced all that possibly may; to which purpose he is to hasten the Constant Warwick in her preparations to accompany him, the Gloucester being ready.

1053. [p. 28.] 10 Jan. S. P. to Sir William Jennens,<sup>5</sup> Gloucester, Downs.—The king doth not think fit to allow of his desires of taking men out of the merchant ships, they 'having had protections from him, and if any misfortune should arrive to any of them an unanswerable

He is to use what other means he can for completing his number without offering any violence, more than desiring the help of such of them as are manned above or up to their full number.

1054. [p. 29.] 11 Jan. S. P. to Lord Brouncker.<sup>1</sup>—Encloses an order of the lord treasurer for execution by the navy board. Desires his answer to the question started by Lord Anglesey<sup>2</sup> and demanded yesterday by the lords: What part of the moneys supplied to and paid away by the navy between 14 July last and 1 Jan. (amounting to 467,098*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*) hath been paid in satisfaction of any part of the debt of the navy accrued before the said 14 July?

1055. [p. 29.] 12 Jan. S. P. to Captain Bridgeman, Greenwich, at Erith.—Takes notice of his care in giving so exact an account of his proceedings in taking in his stores and provisions.

1056. [p. 29.] 12 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Glover, Margate.—As to the vessel he mentions which is chased into Margate by a French man-of-war, in case he has any good grounds to suspect that she belongs to the enemy, he is to give notice thereof to the commissioners for taking care of the admiralty rights.<sup>3</sup>

1057. [p. 30.] 12 Jan. S. P. to Captain Lloyd,<sup>4</sup> Roebuck, Nore.—Has received his of the 7th from Yarmouth Roads, and hopes this will meet him at the buoy of the Nore. Encloses orders to bring his ship to Sheerness to clean.

1060. [p. 30.] 12 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Hears from Harwich that the victuals of the vessels that lie there for transporting soldiers to Dieppe begin to grow short. Desires them to order the victuallers to send directions to their agent at Ipswich to complete the proportions first appointed them.

1061. [p. 31.] 13 Jan. S. P. to Captain Young,<sup>2</sup> Plymouth, at Plymouth.—Would move his Majesty for his son to be one of his lieutenants, but in regard of the probability there is of his sailing away in a very little time, the change may prove inconvenient; and he had better proceed on this voyage with one lieutenant.

1062. [p. 31.] 13 Jan. S. P. to Captain London, Norwich, at Dublin.—Encloses duplicate of the orders sent him last month for returning to the Soundings, in case they should have miscarried. Presses him to hasten thither, and to send up an exact account how he has spent his time and by what order, since his convoying the vessel that was bound for Dublin with ammunition.

1063. [p. 31.] 13 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Thurston, Essex ketch, at Harwich.—According to his desire the king will appoint another vessel to ply in the same station with him, for the better enabling him to deal with the enemy's privateers.

1068. [p. 32.] 14 Jan. S. P. to Captain Watts, Augustine, at the Nore.—Leave to come to town for two days. If upon discourse with the officers of the navy at his coming up they shall think fit to represent to the lords that an addition of men to his complement is necessary, they will give order therein.

1069. [p. 33.] 14 Jan. S. P. to Colonel Strode.<sup>3</sup>—Encloses orders for a supply of seamen unto Captain Rooth's fleet, who are at present in great want of them. The great charge of merchantmen he hath under his convoy and the force of the enemy's men-of-war on the coast of Spain renders it very necessary that he be well manned [1075].

1070. [p. 33.] 14 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>4</sup> Downs.—Has received his papers concerning Captain Preistman and Captain Skelton [1038], and also the answer of Captain Harris to the charge against him [? 1035]. The king approves his sending out the Speedwell and Nightingale to ply off the North Foreland, and the Reserve and Richmond to ply in the Narrow. Upon inquiry, finds the warrant for impresting men at Dover is not yet sent [1038], but will this evening send it to Colonel Strode [1069]. 1078. [p. 34.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Temple, Adventure.—The Success is ordered to convoy the French ambassador's goods to Seine Head. Hopes it will be but a very small hindrance to his proceeding on his voyage to Bilbao.

1074. [p. 34.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Lucas, Hawk fireship, in the Hope.—If he does not judge Thomas Smith fit to be master of his ship, he is to inform the navy board, that they may send him down another master in his room.

1075. [p. 34.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Sir William Jennens,<sup>1</sup> Gloucester, Downs.—As to his want of men, the Governor of Dover is ordered to imprest 200 able seamen in the parts thereabouts for Captain Rooth's fleet, who on application will doubtless let him have a share of them [1069].

1076. [p. 35.] 15 Jan. *S. 1081. [p. 36.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Lanyon,<sup>1</sup> at Plymouth.—Is sorry the despatch of the Swan is like to meet with delay for want of money, which he heartily wishes he could tell how to remedy [1080]. Victuals and guns for her have been ordered. Hopes the Morning Star will be sufficient for convoying to and fro the vessels trading to Wales for coals, until the Swan can be got ready.

1082. [p. 36.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Skelton.<sup>2</sup>—Having acquainted the king with what he writes concerning his lieutenant and boatswain, he has appointed another boatswain to be sent down from hence; but if he does not arrive before he sails, Captain Rooth will appoint him one for the present voyage, to whom has also been sent a blank commission for another lieutenant to be appointed by him [1085].

1083. [p. 37.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Mr. Evelyn.<sup>3</sup>—Has lately received a letter from one of the officers of the Duke of Albemarle's regiment from Dover, acquainting him that several of the soldiers of that regiment shipped on board the Marigold in the Downs were sick, so that they were put on shore, 'and that there being no order for providing for them, your agent at Dover has, at the instance of the officers, taken care for sending them up to convenient quarters.' Encloses the king's order for indemnifying the agent, as in the former case of the soldiers in the Blessing.

1084. [p. 37.] 15 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will take the pleasure of the lords whether the 4 ships they mention shall be paid off quite, or only unto Michaelmas 1672. Desires to know what is done concerning the 3 merchant ships to be taken up, and what return they have from Chester touching the vessels for transporting the soldiers thence to Ireland; and again asks for their opinion where the Princess should be brought to refit.

Will move his Majesty concerning the victuals for the soldiers. The master of the vessel bound to the Downs with stores for the Monck desires convoy. Thinks he may safely adventure over the Flats without, but if the board judge it not safe, in 2 or 3 days Sir John Narbrough will go to the Downs with some ships. Will acquaint the lords with what they write concerning the pay for the masters of the great ships. Captain Lanyon<sup>1</sup> writes from Plymouth that the victualler's agent there hath as yet received no orders for victualling the Swan prize.

1085. [p. 38.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>2</sup>—Captain Skelton<sup>3</sup> acquaints the writer that his boatswain hath left the ship and is come away for London, and that his lieutenant hath desired his discharge. The king has sent down another boatswain and a blank commission for a lieutenant whom he is to select, as also a boatswain, if the one sent should not get on board the Speedwell before they sail [1082].

Postscript.—Is glad the difference concerning the penants is ended without further trouble.

1086. [p. 38.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Harris,<sup>4</sup> Constant Warwick.—To put Mr. Howes's money, goods, and servants on shore into the charge of Mr. St. Michel,<sup>5</sup> to continue there till the Hampshire calls for them to carry them over to Jersey [1058].

1087. [p. 38.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Clements, Greyhound, Downs.—The soldiers bound for Dieppe now in the Downs are to be put on shore again in England, so his care for convoying them will be over. Captain Harris has orders to leave Mr. Howes's money and goods at Deal [1086].

1088. [p. 39.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Captain Young,<sup>6</sup> at Plymouth.—Thanks him for his list of the merchant ships going under his convoy. 1089. [p. 39.] 15 Jan. S. P. to Major Darell,<sup>1</sup> Sheerness.—Will move the lords concerning his desires for the pay of the Queenborough yacht. Wishes him the recovery of his health.

1090. [p. 39.] 17 Jan. [S. P.] to Commissioner Deane.<sup>2</sup>—To fit the Frog dogger to imprest men for the ships at Portsmouth [1065]. Is glad the Lion and Warspite are so forward; commanders will be sent down to take care of them.

1091. [p. 40.] 17 Jan. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>3</sup> Hope.—Encloses orders for his sailing to the Downs; and for disposing of the Wivenhoe and Fortune flyboat, which he intends to leave behind him.

The warrant to the Governor of Dover for men for him hath been sent 2 or 3 days since [1069]. The king approves his sending the Dover before him [1094]. This (brother) is the sum of what I shall say to you upon this subject, and which upon the foresight I long ago had of some such like consequences as these, led me (as you may well remember) to the advising you to the considering well what you were going about when you first sought for this employment; therefore, in a word, let me persuade you to make it your business to be as serviceable to the king and careful of yourself as you can while you are in it, and unless you can have any reasonable hopes given you from Mr. Evelyn that matters will go better with you hereafter as to payment, labour with as much decency, prudence, and speed as you can to get out of it; and so God bless you.'

Is much importuned by some persons of quality at court to obtain employment for one Captain Clinton [1156], a gentleman of an honourable family, kinsman to Captain Killigrew,<sup>3</sup> and a reformado<sup>4</sup> at this time with him in the Monck. Has written to Captain Killigrew for a character of him, who reports him fit for a sea officer, having been with him a year at sea and in three engagements, where he behaved himself 'like a gentleman and an understanding man'—a character which wants downright diligence, sobriety, and seamanship. Entreats him therefore to inform himself of his qualifications, and report to the writer; 'for as no man living can be more inclined than myself to favour a gentleman that is a true seaman, so neither is there any man more sensible than (after many years' observation) I am, of the ruinous consequences of an over-hasty admitting persons to the office and charge of seamen upon the bare consideration of their being gentlemen.'

1158. [p. 67.] 27 Jan. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will acquaint his Majesty of the readiness of the vessels at Chester to take in the soldiers for Ireland. Sir John Narbrough is ordered to send one of his ships to Harwich to convoy the vessels with soldiers to Dieppe. His Majesty approves of their employing the Fortune flyboat for carrying the masts, anchors, and other stores for the ships fitting from Portsmouth. Will acquaint them with the king's pleasure concerning the disposal of the vessels in the Downs from which the soldiers were landed, and will also inform him of the irregularity of the orders sent them from the Master of Requests upon Watkins's petition. As to the boatswain of the Swan, has written to Captain Binning [1118]. The Pearl, now cleaning at Plymouth, needs a small and best bower cable [1154]. Where Ralph Lassells's own signature occurs it is so curious as to suggest that he must have been crippled, either by gout or by the loss of his hand; but it resembles the form adopted in the text, which is also the spelling of Pepys's Register (supra, vol. i. p. 376). ships in the Channel are ordered carefully to look out for Sir George Waterman's ship [1149]. The king approves the person propounded by them as boatswain for the hulk at Woolwich; desires them to suggest another able man for that at Chatham [1200], the office of boatswain of a hulk deserving as much care to be used in the choice of a person to manage it as the best of the king's ships. Hopes they will, as they find men deserving encouragement, recommend them hither, the writer having 'met with too much reason to fear that the want of some such recommendations hath hindered the modest men, who keep strictly to their duty on board, from the preferment due to them, whilst others more solicitous in the getting of certificates and less scrupulous of spending their time on shore, have carried it away from them.'

Will move the king for appointing officers to the Arms of Terver and the Europa [1200]. Sir John Narbrough is ordered to send one of his ships to Rye to convoy the Greenwich pink, as also the other vessels going from Portsmouth with soldiers to Dieppe [? 1187]. Has spoken with the Duke of Monmouth to hasten the soldiers to Chester, and hopes the vessels will not lie long in demurage in expectation of them. Will remind his Majesty concerning the entering men on the great ships at Chatham, and the disposal of the vessels in the Downs from which the soldiers were landed.

1167. [p. 71.] 29 Jan. S. P. to Captain Temple, Adventure, Portsmouth.—Is sorry he is likely to be delayed by the Success's want of provisions and stores. complaints against him (ib. 1672-3, pp. 81, 134, 283, 295, 298). In June 1673 the Duke of York had recommended that Ephraim Skinner should be employed at Leghorn in the room of Sir Thomas Clutterbuck for fitting out the galleys (ib. 1673, p. 336), but see Nos. 1357 and 1629, infra. Clutterbuck afterwards became victualler for the Mediterranean, from 31 Dec. 1674 (supra, vol. i. p. 165). Some of his letters from Leghorn are signed for him by Charles 'Clotterbook,' the variation in spelling being intentional. For another illustration of this practice see Hollond, Discourses of the Navy, p. lxxi, note 1 (N. R. S. vol. vii.).

Desires him to cause all possible despatch to be made with the Dartmouth, and that she also be hastened to that station. Encloses the orders for the Pearl mentioned in his last [1150].

1169. [p. 72.] 29 Jan. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>2</sup>—The king approves his care in the speedy supplying the Adventure with victuals; she and the Success to be supplied with what they want and hastened away. If Captain Temple's purser is discharged [1167], will move his Majesty on behalf of the person he mentions to succeed him. Can give no positive answer to what he writes about the manning of the great ships with him. The writer's election in Parliament remains yet undetermined by reason of public business coming into the House so fast as to prevent its being at leisure to judge of private.<sup>3</sup>

A vice which I pray God grant I may see rectified before it prove too fatal, not only to his Majesty’s service, but the whole navigation of our country.’

1194. [p. 82.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Captain Thurston, Essex ketch, at Harwich.—Has received his account of his being driven into Harwich by distress of weather. To lose as little time as he can in getting out again.

1195. [p. 82.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Captain Walsh,<sup>2</sup> Jersey.—Has a month's leave to go into the country.

1196. [p. 82.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>3</sup>—Hopes ere this the cables for the Pearl are despatched [1154, 1158], to enable her to carry out her orders to bring about such ships as are bound to the Downs. Is glad the Swan is in so great a readiness [1175].

1197. [p. 82.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>4</sup> Pearl, at Plymouth.—To lose no time in getting his provisions and cables on board, and then to carry out the orders sent him through Colonel Piper [1196]. Has acquainted the king with his desire of being sent out in the Soundings a-cruising, but this service appearing necessary to be done, and there being no other ships unemployed, he could not be excused from it.

1198. [p. 83.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>5</sup>—To use all possible earnestness to despatch Captain Rooth's fleet [1191]; and to hasten the Mermaid, the merchants concerned in her convoy being very earnest with his Majesty. The request of the town of Harwich [1179] is granted by the king, who desires to know when the ship will be launched. Hopes the news in his last does not hold of the enemy's being without the Isle of Wight with 20 sail of men-of-war.

1199. [p. 83.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Captain Killigrew.<sup>6</sup>—The king (at the desire of Mr. Fanshawe) gives his lieutenant Gregory leave to come up to town [1274].

Does not forget the moving his Majesty for supplying the Arms of Terver with officers, and will again move the lords at their next meeting touching what they desire concerning the Europa. They will receive directions this morning as to the slaves to be bought at Leghorn [1166], the vessels at Chester taken up to transport soldiers, and the ships in the Downs attending upon that service.

1201. [p. 84.] 5 Feb. S. P. to Captain Watson, Buck dogger.—To deliver the clothes and other necessities of Mr. Joy, late commander of the Buck dogger,<sup>1</sup> or to give account in writing for the lords of the occasion of his detaining them.

1202. [p. 84.] 7 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The ships named in the margin being nearly or quite ready for sea, and expecting some of their pay before they sail, equal with the other ships that lately went out, the writer desires to know in what condition the board is as to money.

Margin: Antelope, Resolution, Happy Return, St. David, Roebuck, Holmes, Yarmouth.

1203. [p. 85.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Rooth.<sup>2</sup>—To lose no time in getting out [1191, 1198]. Desires him to send up the name of the person chosen by him to be lieutenant to Captain Tosier in the Stavoreen [1180], that he may inform his Majesty and have his approbation.

<sup>1</sup> John Joy had been appointed commander of the Buck dogger in 1673 (supra, vol. i. p. 372). He was succeeded by Captain William Watson, who had been in command of the Chatham sloop [287]. Both Charnock, Biog. Nav. i. 432, and Pepys's Register, vol. i. p. 421, supra, reverse the order of the commands, and place Watson's command of the Buck dogger earlier than that of the Chatham sloop. It is probable that the date of his commission for the Buck dogger, which is given by both Charnock and Pepys as '5 Jan. 1673,' should be read '5 Jan. 1673-4.'

1205. [p. 86.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Wetwang,<sup>2</sup> Newcastle.—Is sorry the bad weather has detained him so long at Leith. The ships at Humber bound for London expect him with great impatience [1188]. Is sorry his sails are so bad, but the officers of the navy have sent him a mainsail and a best bower cable.

1206. [p. 86.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, Plymouth.—Is sorry for his want of men; advises him to make the best use he can of his press warrant. His attendance on the Welsh colliery is not to hinder him from cruising abroad upon the coast while the wind is out of the way or the colliers are not ready.

1207. [p. 87.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Ashby,<sup>3</sup> Lion, Portsmouth.—His Majesty, upon some considerations now before him, hath thought fit to order the respiting of entering any more men on his and the other ships at Portsmouth; and upon that occasion it is also that his lieutenants are not yet appointed.

1208. [p. 87.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>4</sup>—Captain Rooth's fleet has been forced to stay longer at Portsmouth than was expected by reason of the wind, which, though fair, did so overblow that they durst not put out of the harbour [1178]. Thinks they sailed from thence yesterday.

1209. [p. 87.] 7 Feb. *S. 1210. [p. 88.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Killigrew,<sup>1</sup> Monck, Downs.—To send word why he has not sailed according to Sir John Narbrough's orders for going to Rye and Portsmouth [1166, 1187].

1211. [p. 88.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Burton,<sup>2</sup> Hampshire, Downs.—To send word why he hath not followed his orders for going to Jersey and Guernsey.

1212. [p. 88.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Mr. Lewis.<sup>3</sup>—The motion made to the king and lords at their last meeting was from information from the navy office and sundry other hands that he did wholly apply himself to the business of the victualling, and commit too great a part of the business of the ticket office to clerks. The matter is referred to the officers of the navy, to whom he should apply. If they report that the business may be performed under his relation to the victualling office with the full benefit expected from his service by his Majesty therein, neither the king or lords will give him any trouble about it [1379].

1213. [p. 89.] 7 Feb. S. P. to Captain Roome Coyle,<sup>4</sup> French Ruby.—To receive and victual the two companies of soldiers [1230]. Is glad to hear his ship may be fitted at Sheerness when the king hath occasion for her, which will save much time and charge in carrying her up to Chatham.

1214. [p. 90.] 10 Feb. *S. 1216. [p. 90.] 10 Feb. S. P. to Sir William Jennens,<sup>2</sup> Portsmouth.—Is sorry for his indisposition. Further orders will be sent when his ship is surveyed.

1217. [p. 91.] 10 Feb. S. P. to Captain Killigrew,<sup>3</sup> Monck, at Portsmouth.—Has received his of the 6th from the Downs reporting the great leakiness of his ship. Commissioner Deane<sup>4</sup> is to cause a survey to be taken of her.

1218. [p. 91.] 10 Feb. S. P. to Captain Fowler, Rupert, at Portsmouth.—The king has ordered the respiting the entering of any more men at Portsmouth, so it will be needless that any vessel be appointed to press men for him.

1219. [p. 91.] 10 Feb. S. P. to Captain Colt, Hunter, at Plymouth.—Has received his of the 7th from the Downs. As to what he writes concerning the preparations making here for the retaking of New York, his Majesty did intend to have sent some ships that way, but a peace with the Dutch being now near concluding, the writer presumes that design will be over.

1220. [p. 91.] 10 Feb. S. P. to Captain Hamilton, Mary Rose, at Portsmouth.—Is glad of his safe arrival at Spithead. He is to despatch the refitting of his ship.

the Nonsuch to be already sailed). Has acquainted the king with the time he writes the ship at Harwich will be ready to launch [1198], and shall write to the officers of the navy to send the anchors and cables for her [1225]. The captain of the Monck writes that his ship is very leaky, both in her bows and on her starboard side. Desires him to survey her defects on her arrival at Spithead.

1225. [p. 93.] 10 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Captain Hamilton of the Mary Rose at Spithead writes that, being at anchor off the North Foreland on Thursday in a violent storm, he was forced to cut and leave two anchors behind him, but supposes they may be recovered, having left good buoy and buoy-ropes to them. The new ship at Harwich will be ready to launch by the 26th [1224, 1264]; desires them to hasten down the anchors and cables for her.

1226. [p. 93.] 10 Feb. The same to the same.—The writer is to advertise them from Mr. Secretary Coventry<sup>1</sup> that there is one Cusack, an Irishman, now said to be lurking somewhere about his Majesty's navy, after whom great inquiry is made for several villainous facts by him committed in Ireland. Other description of him Mr. Secretary cannot give than that he is a tall proper man; the surest character of knowing him being his name, and the report he hath for his manifold villainies wheresoever he is known. If they meet with him, to report it.

1227. [p. 94.] 11 Feb. S. P. to Captain Herbert.<sup>2</sup>—At the desire of his Royal Highness he is appointed to seize a ship of the enemy's bound to the West Indies, said to be put by distress of weather into some port of Shetland. The treaty of peace being concluded with condition that hostilities shall cease here at home within 12 days after its publication, which may be expected within 8 days from now, it is of moment that no time be wasted [1233].

of a new vessel said to have been lately built at Portsmouth for his Highness's use, signifying his intention that she should be forthwith finished and rigged on his own account, the season calling for her speedy setting out on the service she is intended for, the fetching of Rhenish wine. At the first meeting of the lords, the writer will acquaint them with this his Majesty's purpose, and prepare orders for the respective officers of the yard; meanwhile desires him to report as to her state.

1229. [p. 96.] 11 Feb. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>1</sup> Plymouth.<sup>2</sup>—Encloses a copy of a warrant sent away the last post overland to meet him at Cadiz.

1230. [p. 95.<sup>3</sup>] 12 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Shall move the king concerning the carpenter they recommend for the Europa; as also for orders to the governor at Sheerness to direct the sentinels there to keep watch on the stores lying without the fort. The Monck is ordered to convoy the vessels at Rye and Portsmouth with soldiers to Dieppe. Desires them to desist entering of men on the ships at Portsmouth. Orders were sent them last night for discharging the merchantmen taken up and forbearing to take up any more, so that there will be no need that the Arms of Terver be fitted out in the room of one of them. They are not to enter the officers of the new ship building at Bristol<sup>4</sup> into pay until she be delivered at Portsmouth according to contract. Has sent orders to the French Ruby to receive and victual the two companies of soldiers appointed to be sent on board her from time to time for 'inforcing' the garrison at Sheerness [1213]; desires the board to send hammaccoes, if needed for their accommodation.

1231. [p. 97.] 12 Feb. S. P. to Captain Lhostein,<sup>5</sup> Antelope, Sheerness.—Has received his of the 9th with an account of the readiness of his ship. Orders to sea will be sent him shortly.

1284. [p. 97.] 12 Feb. S. P. to Captain Perriman,<sup>2</sup> William dogger, at Boston.—Thanks him for his of the 7th from Bridlington Bay. Is sorry for the great loss happened to the collier ships.

1241. [p. 100.] 12 Feb. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>2</sup>—Thanks him for his account of the king's ships in his port. Wonders that the Hawk fireship and Peterman dogger should go into Catwater, the commanders having wrote word that they would forthwith put to sea. The writer is to desire him to hasten them out to sea in search of Sir John Narbrough, according to the orders received from Sir John, and to send up an account of their proceedings, and pretences for lying in port contrary to orders. If his fleet is not already gone from Plymouth, desires him to deliver the enclosed to Captain Rooth [? 1229].

1242. [p. 101.] 12 Feb. *S. 1246. [p. 102.] 14 Feb. S. P. to Captain Tosier,<sup>1</sup> Stavoreen, Plymouth.—Thanks him for his of the 10th from Plymouth Sound.

1247. [p. 102.] 14 Feb. S. P. to Captain John Lanyon,<sup>2</sup> at Plymouth.—The captain of the Success, one of the convoys going to Bilbao, writes from Falmouth that she is 'so very leaky forward on in the powder-room as that she is not in a condition to proceed the voyage.' Desires him on her arrival at Plymouth to survey her defects, and if they are such as may be speedily repaired, to put her in hand forthwith. 1254. [p. 104.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>3</sup> Pearl, at Plymouth.—The king is well pleased with his last adventure of the caper, but commands (upon application of some merchants pretending to be concerned in the tin which the caper had so lately taken) that he respite the disposing of the tin till the matter be considered. It will not be determined with any partiality, but according to the true meaning of the act of state by which the commanders and companies of his Majesty's ships were promised the benefit of what capers they should happen to take.

1255. [p. 104.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, at Plymouth.—Believes the backwardness of his stores may have arisen from the want of moneys in them that were to supply them, Mr. Lanyon<sup>4</sup> having lately made great complaints in that particular with too much reason, but the writer hopes that in a few days he will be able to go to sea. The king is well satisfied with his resolution of keeping on board.

Has therefore written to Captain Pinn to hasten out again to his station [1259].

1259. [p. 106.] 17 Feb.<sup>2</sup> S. P. to Captain Pinn, Dartmouth, at Plymouth.—The war being now over, the king is pleased to leave the capers taken to be disposed of for the benefit of the commanders and companies who have had the good fortune to take them.

The orders enclosed will not admit of so much delay of time as the cleaning of his ship will take up; he is therefore to lose no time in executing them.

1262. [p. 107.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>3</sup>—Will communicate his of the 15th to the lords touching the ship built for the prince [1228] and send him their further directions; as also about what is to be done with the Mary, Gloucester, and York, and the ships designed for France with the soldiers.

1263. [p. 107.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Sir Richard Munden,<sup>4</sup> Plymouth.—Desires an account of the unfortunate mistake between him and the French man-of-war, that the writer may be able to inform the king and lords in the arguments he has to give why the Frenchman ought to judge him to be one of the King of England's ships, as also how he proves himself rightly commissioned from the King of France, and lastly, what damage the king's ship or subjects on board have sustained from the Frenchman [1282].

1264. [p. 108.] 17 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will acquaint the lords with what they write of the case of George Crow, late master of the George ketch. The king approves of what they propose, that the Harwich be launched the first spring<sup>1</sup> in March, when her masts and furniture will be all ready at Harwich for her [1225]. The Duke of Monmouth desires that the vessel at Rye which waits for soldiers may continue there some few days longer. The king and lords, with the lord treasurer, have it under consideration what ships shall be sent forth or continued abroad and which shall be discharged, towards which, and other points of retrenchment, the writer has prepared several particulars to be offered to them, pursuant to his discourse with the board at their meeting concerning the same last Saturday. The captain of the Augustine writes that one John Ware, a pilot who was ordered by the board to pilot him into Yarmouth Roads, did on the 12th go ashore at Harwich and returned not again, whereby the ship was in a great danger of being lost for want of an able pilot. Desires to know where he may be found, that he may move the lords for a warrant for apprehending him.

Postscript.—The captain of the William dogger is in great want of a cable of 8 inches, which he desires may be furnished to him at Boston [1257].

1265. [p. 109.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Captain Herbert.<sup>2</sup>—Encloses a copy of an affidavit this day brought him from the Lord Mayor, complaining of a violation of his Majesty's protection to a ship employed on the work of the City. This, if true, will give occasion to very great displeasure in his Majesty towards the officer guilty of it, and indeed the insolence cannot but be reckoned insufferable. Desires him to make inquiry and discharge the person so pressed, and to report the name of the officer guilty of this disorder, 'as being that which his Majesty resolves in no wise to let pass without some mark of his displeasure against it.'

1267. [p. 109.] 17 Feb. S. P. to Captain Lhostein,<sup>1</sup> Antelope, Sheerness.—Is sorry he is still in so great want of men. Encloses orders for sailing to the buoy of the Nore, where he hopes he will have better opportunities of procuring them.

1268. [p. 110.] 18 Feb. S. P. to Mr. Brereton, clerk of the check, Woolwich.—Desires that for the enabling him to give that daily satisfaction to the king and lords which is necessary touching the present posture of every ship, he will not fail for the time to come to mention that particular, hitherto omitted, of the number of men actually appearing on board and mustered, as well as the numbers borne. The writer has hitherto observed such an irregularity in one of his weekly accounts as he 'never met withal from any other hand, nor would be by any means sufferable to be continued'; which is that, 'whilst not a quarter part of the complement of men have been found appearing on board, a considerable number above the complement have been found borne as supernumeraries upon the ship's book, which in harbour is an exorbitance so great as can in no measure be justified, . . . especially with the clerk of the check, upon whom no piece of duty lies more expressly than that of keeping to attendance all persons that are borne, and that no number be borne upon any ship beyond the number established.' He is to take care to prevent any such irregularities for the time to come [1358].

Postscript.—Since writing, has cast his eye a little more particularly upon the very list he now sends, and discovers the same error in the St. David and Dunkirk—the former, whose complement is 260, has 295 men borne and but 191 mustered; and the latter, whose complement is but 340, hath borne 375, and appearing but 274.

1269. [p. 111.] 18 Feb. S. P. to Captain Pyend,<sup>2</sup> Ruby, at the Nore.—Has received his of the 13th from Humber. His ship is to be surveyed on her arrival at the buoy of the Nore, and it is left to him and his company to dispose of the caper they have taken. Will move the lords concerning the payment of his men, that they may have no cause to think themselves the worse used for their readiness to go forth the last time without their pay when the other ships received it.

1270. [p. 111.] 18 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has received a letter from Captain Herbert of the Cambridge dated the 15th, saying that his pilot for Shetland [1233] was not then come down, nor the Dove dogger. They are to hasten the one, and to take care that Captain Perriman<sup>1</sup> inquire in the River concerning the delay of the other.

1271. [p. 112.] 18 Feb. S. P. to [Captain Herbert<sup>2</sup>].—Has written to the navy board to hasten down his pilot and the dogger [1270]. Doubts not that the Crown will be waiting for him in the Rolling Grounds; if not he is to stay for her [1240, 1298].

Postscript.—Since writing, understands by the list from the Downs that the Crown is gone from thence.

1278. [p. 114.] 19 Feb. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough.<sup>4</sup>—Finds that the late blowing weather hath very much dispersed his squadron. The Greenwich, Hawk fireship, and Peterman dogger are come to the Downs, and the Bonetta sloop at Mount's Bay, who is ordered to return also to the Downs. The Greenwich is ordered to the buoy of the Nore to convoy the French ship, the Bourbon, to Dover, and thence to Severn with the vessel that carries the stores for the new ship at Bristol.<sup>5</sup> The commander of the Hawk fireship writes that she is too leaky to keep the sea, but his Majesty hath not thought fitting upon the bare report of the captain to order her into port, 'expecting upon your returning to the Downs to have a more perfect account from you of her condition.'

lords desire to be yet more particularly informed in the business of the French man-of-war lately come into Plymouth with Sir Richard Munden [1263] 'after the unfortunate mistake of their meeting one another at sea as enemies, led thereto, as Sir Richard Munden saith, by the French ship's answering from Amsterdam after Sir Richard Munden had first declared his belonging to Whitehall.' He is to send the reason of the departure of the Success from Plymouth for Morlaix without order. Hopes the Dartmouth is ere this sailed to Falmouth to join with the Adventure. If not, desires him to quicken her, as also any other of his Majesty's ships that shall be in port, the time being now short after which hostilities are to cease [1287].

1284. [p. 115.] 21 Feb. S. P. to Captain Bridgeman, Greenwich, at the Nore.—Has received his of the 18th from the Downs, and hopes this will find him arrived at the buoy of the Nore, whither the writer presumes his convoys will hasten. He is ordered, after having seen the Bourbon at Dover, to convoy a vessel with stores to Portsmouth for the ordnance office, and another to Lundy with stores for the new ship at Bristol [1278, 1290]. Has acquainted the officers of the navy with his having missed the anchor and cable they had sent for his ship to the Downs.

1288. [p. 117.] 21 Feb. S. P. to Mr. Philip Lanyon.<sup>1</sup>—Much wonders that the Success should depart from Plymouth without any order [1282], or staying to receive the effects of his care for repairing her defects. The lords are very sensible of his care for supplying the Nonsuch with topmasts, and desire her hastened away. The new boatswain of the Swan is gone down to her.

1289. [p. 118.] 21 Feb. S. P. to Captain Temple, Adventure, at Falmouth.—The lords will doubtless call Captain Harris to a strict account for leaving him without his order [1215, 1296]. Hopes the Dartmouth is joined with him, so that he can proceed on his voyage with his convoys.

1290. [p. 119.] 21 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Is informed by the Duke of Monmouth that his Majesty hath ordered 34 companies of 60 men each, besides officers—viz. 14 of the Duke of Buckingham's, 11 of the Earl of Tyrone's, 5 of Lord Widdrington's, and 4 lately come from Barbados—to march to Chester or Holyhead [1333] for Ireland. Has written to Mr. Lock, secretary at war [1291]. Prays them to be doing all they can towards providing vessels and victuals, giving Mr. Lock from time to time an account of their proceedings and readiness therein. They are also to provide vessels and victuals for transporting thither 3 companies more—Captain Edward Roscarrock's at the Isle of Scilly, Sir Robert Hilliard's and Captain Godolphin's at Plymouth—and to direct the masters of the vessels they shall so employ to communicate with the officers in chief at those garrisons [1342 and 1344]. The captain of the Greenwich supposes that the vessel with an anchor and cable for him is returned from the Downs, as he cannot hear of her there; as he is ordered to the buoy of the Nore to convoy the Bourbon to Dover, and thence to proceed with the Papenburgh<sup>2</sup> to Lundy [1284], they may if they think fit send them down to him.

1291. [p. 120.] 21 Feb. S. P. to Mr. Lock.—Has communicated with the navy board about the 37 companies of soldiers for Ireland [1290], and has prepared an order for them for his Majesty to sign. Desires that the 1292. [p. 121.] 24 Feb. S. P. to Captain Stout, Warspite, at Plymouth.—Doubts whether he shall be able to meet his desire for the convoy for Newfoundland, that being to be provided out of ships already abroad and therefore already provided with commanders.

1293. [p. 121.] 24 Feb. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>1</sup> Pearl, at Plymouth.—Hopes that what he writes touching his having already disposed of the tin [1276] will upon examination be found truth, and not a practice to avoid the satisfaction demanded.

1294. [p. 121.] 24 Feb. S. P. to Captain Pinn, Dartmouth, at Plymouth.—Hopes the orders sent him on Tuesday last [? 1259] reached him before he left Plymouth to sail to his former station.

1295. [p. 122.] 24 Feb. S. P. to Captain Colt, Hunter, Plymouth.—Will show what fitting respect he can to his desire to be sent to the West Indies.

1296. [p. 122.] 24 Feb. S. P. to Captain Harris,<sup>2</sup> Success, at Plymouth.—Is specially commanded by the king and lords to take notice to him of ‘that which seems a most unanswerable breach of orders, and a misbehaviour not to be forgiven by any that can wish well to the discipline of the navy.’ He lately described his ship as unfit to proceed to the Bay of Biscay without some extraordinary refittings, which moved his Majesty to order him to Plymouth [1247], whither he came, but without inquiring or staying for orders, and, contrary to his express instructions, went on an errand of his own over to Morlaix, and at his return the condition of his ship it is found can be cured in 3 days’ time. He is not to wonder that the king and lords take more than ordinary notice of so fresh a miscarriage and of so high a nature, after another so lately forgiven him, and therefore desires him to send up the grounds of his late proceedings [1375].

P. to Colonel Piper*.<sup>4</sup>—Captain Pinn's<sup>5</sup> orders, which were intended to have been sent in his of the 17th, were sent the next day after by express [1259]. Thanks him for his account of Captain Tapson's scuffle with the privateers. Wonders he has no notice thereof from Captain Tapson<sup>6</sup> himself, some reports having been spread to his disadvantage [1310]. To send the reasons for the Mary Rose and Nonsuch lying in port when the wind is fair.

1302. [p. 125.] 24 Feb. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Eaglet ketch reports from Harwich that the buoy of the Gunfleet is either gone or sunk: desires them to give notice to the Trinity House. Will speedily send orders for discharging the Hopeful Margaret dogger, but they are to supply her with victuals while she continues in pay [1297]; she has them on board for no longer time than till to-day.

Greenwich hath long since had orders to convoy the Fortune flyboat bound with stores to Portsmouth. Has acquainted the lords with their readiness to answer their late desires in taking care for the despatch of what is necessary to be done for the king's service at Derby House,<sup>1</sup> the particulars whereof the writer will from time to time signify to the officers of Deptford Yard. The hired vessels at Portsmouth and Rye intended to transport soldiers to Dieppe are to remain there undischarged in order to that service. To hasten their report to the lords 'touching the numbers of men fitting to be allowed in time of peace, as well on those ships wherein no establishment hath been yet made, as the others on which you find any just cause to propound any alteration.' Has moved the lord treasurer in what they demand touching their disposal of the moneys that lie in the treasury, whether towards the cutting of[f] the growing charge, or the stopping the clamours of the Anne, Hester, and Nightingale's companies; and he will speedily give them directions by the treasurer of the navy. The Diamond is to go to New York under the command of Sir Robert Robinson;<sup>2</sup> they are to consider how far her being sheathed may be necessary for that voyage, unless it be for some other reason than that of the worm. Encloses a letter from Captain Hiatt,<sup>3</sup> late commander of the Dove dogger, cast away on the coast of Northumberland;<sup>4</sup> desires them to give directions about his disposal of the sails, rigging, anchors, cables, and guns, &c., saved out of her. the Peterman dogger, she staying only for that [1345]. The lord treasurer desires them to calculate and send the writer, without fail some time this day, the number and quarterly charge of the workmen in each yard after paying off those lately discharged ; his lordship also expects some account of their debate touching what was referred to them on Saturday, to consider what he then propounded to the king and lords about 'the cutting off the growing charge of seamen by paying them to Michaelmas, 1672, with money, and the remainder by tickets to be paid them in such a method as shall be established and published for their satisfaction therein.' Out of some belief that the lord treasurer hath that the late abatement of the victualling declaration to 8,200 men for 8 months is really more than by the hopes he hath of discharging the fleet the men remaining abroad will take up, as well as from a desire of preventing all issues of money that are not absolutely necessary, he hath provided to himself the making of two demands—namely, 5,000 men presently,<sup>1</sup> and the remainder some time hence, when a perfecter judgment may be made of the quantity of victuals that will indeed be expended [1359]. This will save to the lord treasurer 'the present parting with so much money or funds<sup>2</sup> as that remainder of provisions would presently call for, and which may be applied to occasions of present and more pressing importance.' Desires them to let him know if there appears anything of inconvenience arising from this proposition 'more than doth to his lordship, or I must confess doth to me, who would be glad of using any means of lessening other issues of money, that we may be enabled to pay the poor seamen without being driven to any longer use of that fatal way of discharging them by ticket.'

the books at his pleasure, notwithstanding their being absent more musters than by the practice of the navy is necessary for the making them "run,"<sup>1</sup> and yet would have me believe that all the while he thus kept them open, he did actually prick them for victuals and wages. Which whether true or no I know not, but seems worthy your inquiry; though if true I can in no wise think it an allowable practice that the clerk of the check should (upon any consideration) delay the making of a man "run," after his several absences do by the practice of the navy require it, it being in no wise (I suppose) to be understood that his Majesty's security in the remitting of "runs" should depend upon the single integrity and discretion of a clerk of the check (it being a trust apparently too great for him), but that it should be lodged in the joint hands of the navy board. Besides that this method of keeping a man open upon the book, at the pleasure of the clerk of the check, after he hath forfeited his pay by his absences, leaves that officer under a constant openness to be tempted by the purser of the ship to which the absent man belongs, to compound for the profits of this practice. I have therefore taken the liberty to trouble you with a copy of what I wrote to this gentleman (to me a stranger), on this matter, with his answer thereto, to the end that if I be found under no mistake in my jealousies herein, you may please to make what use thereof you shall think fit for his Majesty's advantage in the rectifying for the future anything in this practice which you shall find calling for the same' [1374].

expectation of having some account to give you of what you therein wrote, but at present having (twice) at distant times mentioned it to his Majesty, I find him so full of the thoughts he is now under of stopping of all things that look like occasions of laying out money, that I perceive he is more thoughtful of getting out of debt for what is past (wherein God bless his endeavours), than willing to entertain any proposition that may tend to the increasing of it. In which resolution of his, though no man I hope doth more heartily wish his continuing nor have longer prayed for his coming to it than myself, yet such are my apprehensions of the moment it is of to the public to have no time lost that can be saved in the providing a set of new ships that may enable us without the help of France or any other neighbour to contend alone with the Dutch as we have heretofore done (which with sorrow we must acknowledge ourselves unfit to do at this day), that upon that very consideration, besides the many good ones contained in your letter, I will neither forbear to put the king in mind of it as often as is fit, nor my lords of the admiralty in general or his Royal Highness and my lord treasurer in particular, whereof I doubt not to give you speedily some account of my success' [1457].

1878. [p. 156.] 17 Mar. S. P. to Captain Fasby.<sup>1</sup>—Encloses orders for his putting the men on board the French Ruby at Sheerness and then repairing to Calais [1368 and 1381].

1879. [p. 156.] 17 Mar. S. P. to Sir Thomas Allin.<sup>2</sup>—In answer to his of the 14th given him by Mr. Anguish, what the navy board have done is not by way of confirming Mr. Whitfeld singly in the work of the ticket office, but putting him into a capacity of receiving the books and papers, in order to the present easing his Majesty of the charge of Mr. Lewis his salary [1212], he being to be removed and the papers to be disposed of in some single hand until the government of the office could be settled by the lords, this seeming to be no more than the continuing of Mr. Whitfeld in the possession of the papers and exercise of the work which he had in and upon his hands before. This being the case, and the board designing to make a 1880. [p. 157.] 18 Mar. S. P. to Mr. Hayter.<sup>1</sup>—Thanks him for his pains about the list. Encloses two papers that may be of use to him—one towards the perfecting his account of members present at his board; the other, heads to be considered in drawing up a new victualling contract.

1881. [p. 157.] 18 Mar. S. P. to Captain Fasby,<sup>2</sup> Hope.—Repeats his letter [1378] for fear of miscarriage. He is not to proceed to France with the men as at first intended, but to put them on board the French Ruby at Sheerness, there to remain till further orders, and in the meantime to be treated as his own ship's company is and not otherwise, that they may have no ground of complaining. He is then to proceed to Calais, sending the Kitchen yacht up to Greenwich as soon as she has discharged herself of those men at Sheerness that he put on board her.

1882. [p. 158.] 19 Mar. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Peterman dogger is sailed 4 days since with the Roebuck to transport some soldiers to Newcastle. They are to have her furnished there with victuals to bring her back, or at Harwich, in case by contrary winds she puts in thither. The Hawk fireship is to come up to Deptford, and if the victuals she has are not sufficient they are to order her petty warrant victuals for bringing her up.

1400. [p. 164.] 25 Mar. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The soldiers for Tangier being to be shipped from the River, it is inconvenient to send the Cambridge and Crown to Portsmouth; they are therefore to be furnished with victuals and stores in the Downs [1399]. They are to discharge the Greenwich pink at Rye, and the hired vessels at Portsmouth that wait for soldiers. Orders are sent them this morning concerning the paying off of the ships. The lords are well satisfied with their care for the sudden discharge of the ships in the River that are to go about to Chatham.

1401. [p. 165.] 26 Mar. *S. 1407. [p. 166.] 26 Mar. S. P. to Captain Clements.<sup>1</sup>—Hopes he is arrived at Plymouth, where he is to stay till further orders. He is to take in as much provisions as he can stow, as he is intended to bring some persons of quality and their retinues from Brest hither [1435].

Postscript.—It will be necessary for him on his return to give the king and lords satisfaction in the loss of the [St.] Peter galliot [1334].

1408. [p. 167.] 27 Mar. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Newcastle being now come into the River, and she being designed for one of the summer guard, they are to consider to what yard she shall be brought for bringing her into dock in case she shall need it, and to cause her to be viewed and the state of her wants represented to the lords so as to show the charge of fitting her for sea. Also to supply her with petty warrant victuals.

Postscript.—Desires an account for the lords of the state of the ship building at Yarmouth, and whether a fireship or a frigate.<sup>2</sup>

1409. [p. 167.] 27 Mar. S. P. to Mr. Lock.<sup>3</sup>—The ships for Tangier [1392, 1400] are now in the Downs, whither the men are to be transported by vessels which shall be ready to receive them anywhere in the river of Thames on what day the beginning of next week the Duke of Monmouth shall appoint [1411, 1417].

Has endeavoured all he could that the soldiers might be made to march, and not put the king to the charge of transporting them by sea to the Downs [1409]; but the soldiers are not to be trusted on shore, 'Lord Craven' declaring to us at the commission for Tangier when I moved it, that if the men should be commanded to march thither by land, he would not answer for their meeting of ten men of the whole number at Deal.' The board is therefore to make provision, part being to be taken in here and part from Rochester.

1412. [p. 168.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Captain Burton,<sup>2</sup> Hampshire, Spithead.—Encloses orders for his carrying his ship into Portsmouth.

1413. [p. 169.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Sir John Berry,<sup>3</sup> Chatham.—Thanks him for his of the 26th with an account of his getting his ship up to Gillingham. The officers of the navy that are at Chatham will speedily pay off his men.

1414. [p. 169.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, Hope.—Has received his of the 25th from the Downs. He is to acquaint the officers of the navy with his wants as to stores and provisions [1417].

1415. [p. 169.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>4</sup>—Hopes Captain Temple is gone to Bilbao [1397]. Will speak with Captain Binning [1414] concerning the men set ashore by him without tickets, that he may take care to get them for them.

1416. [p. 170.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Commissioner Deane.<sup>5</sup>—There will be no opportunity at present of having the repairs he mentions done to the Greyhound at Portsmouth [1407]. The Hampshire is ordered into Portsmouth to be paid off.

1417. [p. 170.] 28 Mar. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Kitchen yacht and the Royal Escape are to ship 230 of the soldiers at Tower Wharf on Wednesday next and carry them to the Downs [1409, 1420]. Desires them to order a supply of victuals for them, as also for 80 other soldiers 1420. [p. 171.] 28 Mar. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Kitchen yacht being gone out of the River, by what warrant or on what errand he knows not, they are to consider of some other small vessel, not yet paid off, to supply her place [1417, 1424].

Postscript.—Captain Perriman<sup>4</sup> acquaints him that the Unity ketch and Greenwich pink, in his Majesty's pay, are come up the River. If they will answer this service, to furnish them with victuals forthwith.

1421. [p. 172.] 28 Mar. S. P. to Mr. Lock.<sup>5</sup>—The Kitchen yacht and the Royal Escape are to be at Tower Wharf on Wednesday morning, to receive the soldiers for Tangier and carry them to the Downs. That done, the Kitchen is to return for those from Rochester, and in case there be any from Dover they should march to Deal to be shipped. 1432. [p. 176.] 2 Apr. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Encloses an order undirected for a ship to go to Harwich to help rig the new ship. They may direct it to the commander of what ship they judge most fitting, except the Newcastle [1422], who is designed for another service. But there is either the Portsmouth or the Ruby (now come into the River) [1443]. Will move the king and lords to send some ships to Portsmouth to victual, for taking off the beer, &c., there provided, which may prove a loss to the king if not seasonably disposed of. The lords approve their advice concerning the officers and men to be allowed to the Europa prize intended for a hulk at Tangier; the board are to recommend a boatswain and carpenter for her, and return the writer their names, that he may move his Majesty for warrants for them. Has acquainted the king with the insufficiency of the boatswain of the Oxford, who has signed a warrant for his dismissal and for appointing another in his room. debt which remains on him upon the old ; though both of them as well as his Royal Highness' and the lords 'do well agree to the importance it is of to his Majesty that no time be lost in the supplying our present want of naval force by the building of more ships. Nor have I spared to urge the easiness of the terms upon which you seem ready to embrace the undertaking as to what concerns your payments, but neither will that do (at least at present), though I hope so soon as the present growing charge is a little further cut off (in which, blessed be God, a good step hath been in a little time made by the paying off of so many ships), our prospect of things in the navy will become a little more pleasant, and his Majesty be in condition to entertain with more satisfaction the discourse of building of ships.' The lords give him leave to come to town.

1458. [p. 187.] 17 Apr. *S. Which objection in particular, as well as what others (if any) Sir Thomas Clutterbuck shall upon perusal of the contract (which he seems to be yet a stranger to as it is now drawn) find cause to make to any part of the same, I am by their lordships' command to desire you to receive with the reasons thereof from him, and thereupon to adjust the same as near as you can by the doing full right to his Majesty with full satisfaction to Sir Thomas Clutterbuck, and report the same to my lords.'

Concerning which, having this morning moved his Highness Prince Rupert and my lord privy seal<sup>2</sup> once more (Lord Craven being present), they will sign another order for transporting the said men with 3 more of the regiment under Colonel Russell's command, my Lord Craven having informed them that the men are not now to be sent as prisoners but only as soldiers for the garrison of Tangier, as the rest of the soldiers now on board the Cambridge and Crown are [1423, 1464].

1460. [p. 188.] 17 Apr. S. P. to Colonel Rooke, near Canterbury.—The king and lords will direct nothing that may tend to the diminution of Captain Rooke's<sup>3</sup> right, and therefore if Captain Binning in the Swan have the present command in chief while they are together, it is due to the quality of his ship and seniority of his command in the service [1471, 1472].

1464. [p. 189.] 19 Apr. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has advertised the secretary at war of their letter, that the men may be at Tower Wharf at 9 to-morrow morning, to be received on board either the Royal Escape itself or some boat to be provided for the carrying them down to her at Deptford [1459, 1465].

1465. [p. 189.] 19 Apr. S. P. to Mr. Lock.<sup>1</sup>—The Royal Escape (Captain Augustine Burch<sup>2</sup>), which lies at Deptford, is designed by the navy board for carrying the 8 persons to the Downs [1464]. They are to be at Tower Wharf at 9 to-morrow morning.

1466. [p. 190.] 20 Apr. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will obtain the order of the lords for what they propose concerning the Newcastle's men to be employed to help bring about the new ship at Harwich [1456], but there is not a yacht at present in the River for carrying them about to Harwich, unless the Navy yacht may be employed therein [1487]. Will move the lords for the increase of the complement of the Deptford ketch as they propose, and acquaint them with their opinion concerning Sir Robert Robinson's<sup>3</sup> desires for contingent money, and a small vessel to attend him; though in this latter, since the lords' order therein, his Royal Highness doth not intend the Castle frigate shall return with the Diamond but shall proceed on another service. As to the vessels gone and going to Dieppe for bringing over the 150 horse, the writer has spoken with the Duke of Monmouth and several of Lord Duras's<sup>4</sup> officers concerning the report of their marching to Calais to be shipped there, but it appears a mistake; they are therefore to despatch the other two vessels yet behind unto Dieppe. It being probable that some (if not all) of the ships named in the margin will require it, to which ports should they be ordered to be refitted as part of the summer guard?

He is designed to continue abroad this summer as that part of the summer guard which is to lie in the Channel, having under his command the Norwich and Roebuck. If he needs anything that cannot be supplied him where he is, the king will order him to Portsmouth, for taking off some provisions which lie there ready more than what any ships to be set out thence are likely to expend; but if his wants be only boatswain's stores and provisions they can be furnished from 'this town' or Dover. He is to consider the same with regard to the Norwich [1495]. Presumes the Roebuck will in a day or two be in the Downs.

1506. [p. 204.] 9 May. S. P. to Captain Harris,<sup>7</sup> Success, Portsmouth.—Yesterday came his of the 6th from Spithead, signifying his arrival there from Ireland. He is to hasten to bring his ship about to Sheerness, and in the meantime to prepare a journal of each day's proceedings since his departure, and a strict account of his ship and stores to inform the officers of the navy in all things needful for his refitting to sea.

as they have communicated them to the king. When shall the writer wait upon them to consider jointly the draught of the establishment to be made upon Mr. Speaker's<sup>1</sup> late proposition touching the methods of payment? Is to meet Sir Thomas Allin<sup>2</sup> and Sir Jeremy Smyth<sup>3</sup> on another occasion at the navy office this night at 7, and will bring the board's report with him, that he may be ready to answer the lords to-morrow in what they desire of having the particulars set down wherein the present improvement of the ancient method principally lies.

1508. [p. 205.] 12 May. S. P. to Captain Stepney, Drake.—Encloses orders for his sailing into the Hope. His Majesty intends to go down the River to-morrow to try the new yachts, and would have him be ready with the Drake to sail down along with him. It is now under consideration before the lord treasurer, by direction of the lords, concerning the providing some pay for his men before they go to sea.

1509. [p. 205.] 12 May. S. P. to Captain Country,<sup>4</sup> Roebuck, Downs.—Thanks for his account of the 9th of what passes in the Downs, and desires him to continue it as anything of moment shall present.

1510. [p. 205.] 12 May. S. P. to Captain Wetwang,<sup>5</sup> Harwich.—Has received his of the 9th, and is glad the Harwich is in so good a readiness to come about [1466]. As soon as she is within Sheerness, in case the wind do not serve for her present coming up, he is to return with his company to the Newcastle to get her ready for her voyage to Newfoundland.

Eagle, Downs.—Has received his from Plymouth, and is glad to hear of his safe return to England [1536]. Encloses orders for him to bring the Eagle up to Deptford, as he desires. The carpenter he recommends for her in room of the former, deceased, must produce a certificate of ability from some master shipwright.

1518. [p. 206.] 12 May. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, Yarmouth.—He is not to let his difference with his lieutenant [1471] interrupt the king's service, 'remembering that as both his Majesty and my lords of the admiralty will have too much regard to the preservation of discipline to give countenance to any undutiful behaviour in an inferior towards a superior officer, so nothing will give so great an authority to the credit of your lieutenant's present articles and complaints than if in the present voyage you shall by any expressions either of revenge or other passion give him the advantage thereof for proving any part of the allegations he hath lately exhibited to my lords of the admiralty concerning you.'

As to what he lately desired, touching directions for his behaviour in the rescuing<sup>1</sup> of ships taken by the enemy, the lords refer him to his general instructions, well knowing his discretion to be such as not to give any unnecessary occasion of difference between the ships of the States General and himself, by contending with them upon the score of any acts of hostility passed before the expiration of the time limited in the places he is going to for the determination of the war. Besides it is to be presumed that none of the fishermen or other vessels gone forth since the peace are unprovided with passes [1272, 1371].

1514. [p. 207.] 12 May. S. P. to Captain Harman,<sup>2</sup> Bristol.—To entertain Mr. Wells as chaplain of the Bristol in her present voyage.

1515. [p. 207.] 13 May. S. P. to the Navy Board.—At the desire of the Master and Wardens of the Trinity House, the Navy yacht and the Royal Escape are to be assigned for attending such of the Brethren as are designed for the laying down of the sands [1521].

1518. [p. 208.] 14 May. S. P. to Mr. Waith.<sup>3</sup>—To attend the lords at their office at Derby House, in Channel Row, on Saturday morning next, the 16th, at 9 o'clock, about the business of the Chest.

Underwritten: 'The like to Mr. Fenn.'<sup>3</sup>

1519. [p. 208.] 14 May. S. P. to Captain Rooth,<sup>4</sup> at Cadiz.—He is not blamed for the loss of the ships under his convoy taken by the enemy, which is wholly attributed to their separation from him by bad weather. In consequence of the peace, encloses orders for his present return to England without keeping his squadron waiting at Cadiz for the ships from Alicante and Argeir, which probably may be kept within the Straits by contrary winds.

1520. [p. 209.] 15 May. S. P. to Mr. Robert Swann.—The lords being informed by the bearer, Mr. Boatman, that he is able to give them some information in some matters of great importance to his Majesty [1528], he is to attend them to-morrow morning at 10.

1521. [p. 209.] 15 May. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The lords, upon perusal of the board's late report touching Colonel Strode's<sup>5</sup> proposition of having a ship from the king upon the terms by him propounded of undertaking at his own charge to transport his Majesty's subjects from Surinam, have thought fit to respite the determining anything therein until the whole business come to be put in execution, which cannot be done till the return of the person which his Majesty designs speedily to send to that place. into pay to attend the Brethren of the Trinity House who are going upon the inquiry after the new sands to the northward [1515]. Upon perusal of the enclosed letter from the captain of the Garland, they are to consider whether any stores must be sent her to bring her home; and to inform themselves what merchant ship is bound first to the Barbados, that orders for calling home the Garland may be sent by her [1536]. They are to report on the reasonableness of Captain Poole's<sup>1</sup> desire to have some moneys imprested to him for paying the short allowance money which shall grow due to the St. David in the voyage on which she is designed [1536]. Captain Wetwang<sup>2</sup> is ordered to the Newcastle when the Harwich is within Sheerness, leaving her to be carried up as the board shall direct [1510].

1522. [p. 210.] 15 May. S. P. to Captain Roome Coyle.<sup>3</sup>—The service he is at present designed for is only for the entertaining of the soldiers which are to lie on board him for the service of the fort at Sheerness. The officers of the navy are directed to consider how much a yet less number of men than what he has will suffice him for that use.

1523. [p. 211.] 16 May. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough.<sup>4</sup>—Encloses his Majesty's directions under his own hand for his behaviour in case he meet with foreign ships, as upon full debate thereof at a council on Sunday night last it was then resolved [1504]. His ship the Henrietta and the Norwich are ordered to be refitted and victualled for 4 months [1525].

1524. [p. 211.] 16 May. S. P. to Captain Booth.<sup>5</sup> Pearl, Portsmouth.—Is glad his ship is in so good a forwardness. The officers of the navy are to supply him with 3 months' victuals.

1527. [p. 212.] 16 May. S. P. to Captain Guy.<sup>1</sup>—When he sails to Rye, as ordered, to transport Lord Cornbury,<sup>2</sup> he is to receive on board at Greenwich Mr. William Doul and Mr. William Cooke and a servant, and carry them with him to Dieppe.

1528. [p. 212.] 19 May. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Desires them to deliver to the bearer, Mr. Boatman [1520], the pay-books of the St. George for the years 1664, 1665, and 1666, as also the books belonging to her which were sent to Brooke House<sup>3</sup> for the said years, being in order to the making some discoveries of ill practices by some of the officers belonging to the navy [1532]. The books are to be sealed up by the seal of their office, and directed to Sir George Carteret,<sup>4</sup> and Edward Seymour, Esquire,<sup>5</sup> treasurer of the navy.

1529. [p. 213.] 19 May. S. P. to Dr. Lloyd.<sup>6</sup>—Finds from the draught of Sir Walter Walker's commission that the fee of 20 marks which was settled on him by the duke was made payable by his Royal Highness's receiver-general; 'which must in your case be altered, but into what hand to be changed, having no precedent for it (this being the first settlement of any fee that I can meet with upon the lord admiral's advocate) I shall be glad to receive your advice in.'

1580. [p. 213.] 19 May. S. P. to the Commissioners for the Bounty.—On examining the enclosed warrant of the lords to them touching the method of their certificates for the relations of land officers slain in his Majesty's service at sea, the writer finds the word soldiers added to that of officers through a mistake of the clerk's. Returns it rectified, that they may restrain its application to officers, leaving the ordinary soldiers to be provided for in the same manner as the relations of ordinary seamen are by their general instructions.

1581. [p. 214.] 19 May. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>1</sup> Pearl, Portsmouth.—The lords expect to have their late commands obeyed for discharging the man they directed, not doubting but that in a time of peace able men enough may be had without keeping a person against his will, especially while he has a master and another mate besides him.

1582. [p. 214.] 19 May. S. P. to the Navy Board.—In order to the discovering some foul dealing [1528], desires copies of two of the Adventure's books in order to their being put into the hands of the person who propounds the discovery, whose name is at his desire for the present concealed. The books are:—One begun 1 Jan., 1670, another begun 14 Nov., 1671.

her. Will move the king concerning Richard Adams, whom they recommend to be gunner of the galley at Leghorn. Thanks them for their notice of the ship bound to Barbados, by whom orders shall be sent for the coming home of the Garland; desires to know whether she must have some stores sent her by this ship for the bringing her home [1521, 1535, 1536]; also in what time the Europa will be ready to sail for Tangier, that the writer may send orders for the sailing of the Bristol and Drake [1555], out of whose companies he supposes they intend to furnish some men to the Europa.

1585. [p. 216.] 21 May. S. P. to Sir Thomas Chicheley.<sup>1</sup>—Captain Wyborne, commander of the Garland at the Barbados, writes that he is ‘extraordinary bare’ of gunner’s stores, as having neither powder nor shot to defend himself with, nor any supply to be had there [1534, 1536]. If he judges it needful to send any for her better security in coming home, the Happy Adventure, Samuel Tatham,<sup>2</sup> master, now lying at Deptford, sails on Saturday morning next [1534].

1586. [p. 217.<sup>3</sup>] 21 May. S. P. to Captain Wyborne, Garland, at Barbados.—Has received his letters, the last by Captain Delavall.<sup>4</sup> Is sorry his ship is like to be so much prejudiced by the worm; for preventing any further damage to her, encloses orders for his return [1534]. If the master of the ordnance cannot send him gunner’s stores, hopes he will get some small recruit at Barbados [1535].

1587. [p. 216.] 22 May. S. P. to Captain Wright.<sup>5</sup>—To transport the Earl of Shrewsbury<sup>6</sup> to Calais instead of Sir John Duteil<sup>7</sup> (who is not yet ready) to Dieppe, returning into the river of Thames.

1588. [p. 217.] 23 May. The same to the same.—Understands this morning that Lord Shrewsbury will not be so soon ready, but that sending him to Calais will hazard the disappointing of Sir John Duteil. He is therefore to pursue his former orders [1537].

<sup>1</sup> The Edgar, a 3rd rate, also built by Mr. Baylie at Bristol, was launched 29 July, 1668. The builder was much applauded for his excellent contrivance in fitting the cradle to launch her, and the episode passed off apparently without mishap, a spectator writing the same day 'so smooth and well-poised a launch has not been known by the ancientest artists.' But it was afterwards discovered that the fall had been too great, and the vessel had broken three of the 'lowermost ways,' and had given way a little 'in the midships' (*Cal. S. P. To use all diligence to hasten her being brought safe about to Portsmouth.

1550. [p. 221.] 30 May. S. P. to Sir William Temple.<sup>5</sup>—At his return late last night from Windsor, the writer met the king's command signified by Mr. Secretary Coventry<sup>6</sup> for providing a yacht to transport him into Holland. The bearer is Captain Baker,<sup>7</sup> commander of the Merlin, the only yacht at present in his reach. He is esteemed as able a seaman and as diligent, and his yacht as good a sea-boat, as is to be chosen out of the whole number of them.

1555. [p. 223.] 2 June. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will acquaint the lords with the terms on which the carpenter whom they propose for the galley at Leghorn is willing to undertake that employment [1593]. Will move the king for his order to the commissioners of the customs for making the prizes lately sold by the board free ships; and also for his warrant for the carpenter they recommend for the Emsworth sloop. Desires to know in which of the yards the ships named in the margin (expected home from the Straits) should be laid up; and in particular the Reserve, she being arrived at Spithead and now coming about to the Downs. To hasten the fitting out of the Newcastle and Success for Newfoundland. Renews his former desires to them [1534] to know in what readiness the Europa is for Tangier, that orders may be issued for the Bristol and Drake, which are to accompany her. The lords desire their opinions concerning the carrying down the Unicorn to Sheerness to be employed there as a guardship in the room of the French Ruby.

P. to Mr. Hayter*.<sup>2</sup>—John Smart and Robert Axhill having been employed in trimming up and fitting the garden belonging to the admiralty office at Derby House<sup>3</sup> 42 days each, between 23 March and 9 May, the writer desires the board to direct their warrant to the clerk of the check for allowing them the said time on the quarter-books; and in consideration of their extra expenses and charges, thinks that a night for each day will be but a reasonable allowance. The gardener himself will also tender a bill for his son's attendance in the overlooking and directing the work to be done, with some other small disbursements amounting to about 12*l.*; and he desiring the same may be paid him by Mr. Marlow out of the contingent money in his hands, the writer desires his correspondent to move the board therein.

1567. [p. 228.] 9 June. 9 at night. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>2</sup> Downs.—Is just returned from Windsor to find his of the 5th and 8th. Is glad of his safe arrival in the Downs, where he shall receive orders. Desires to know what passed between him and Captain Jenifer<sup>3</sup> touching his flag [1611]. Doubts that the latter hath not behaved with all the discretion that he ought to have done towards a superior commander. As yet has only a general account of it by common talk, but has already spoken upon it to the king and duke.

1584. [p. 235.] 24 June. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Understands from the captain of the Reserve that they seem yet uninformed in the mind of the king and lords touching the disposal of her; but they know that all the ships not designed for the summer guard are to be paid off as fast as they come in. Discoursed yesterday at Windsor with his Royal Highness, in the absence of the king [1582], concerning what they write touching the galley at Livorne, who told him that as to the flag it was determined by the king at Sir Jeremy Smyth's<sup>2</sup> attending him on that behalf, to whom they are to refer, to enable them to send their instructions to Sir John Duteil<sup>3</sup> in it. 'The duke is also of the mind . . . that the galley be hastened from Leghorn by any means of despatch that can be found, and that therefore if soldiers, strangers, can be provided by Sir John Duteil, she should not be kept there in expectation of those from Tangier.' Will give them the king's pleasure on Friday, when the board is to attend the king and lords at Hampton Court.

Upon information from the officers of the navy of several great anchors swept for and brought in to Deal by private persons, the weight whereof discovered them too big for merchantmen and yet without any mark of their belonging to the King of France, the king directed that they should be taken for his use into the custody of Mr. St. Michel,<sup>6</sup> his agent there, being led thereto by the consideration that he had at several times lost many anchors in the same place, and those such as having been taken in Dutch men-of-war could not have his Majesty's mark on them. Desires Lord Arlington to receive the king's determination whether these and what other anchors may hereafter be recovered on which his mark is not found shall be all interpreted to belong to the French. 1654. [p. 259.] 28 July. S. P. to Sir John Werden.<sup>1</sup>—Supposes he has heard of the resolutions lately taken by the king and lords 'touching the effectual preventing the liberty of late generally usurped by merchantmen of wearing the king's jack, contrary to practice, and to the occasioning many inconveniencies, which is intended to be done by a proclamation for the suppressing of that liberty, which, as it will take up some little time in the preparing as it ought to be, I thought fit to give you this information thereof with reference to Captain Willshaw, commander of the Concord merchantman, to whom out of personal respect his Royal Highness while admiral was pleased to indulge the favour of a commission as captain to entitle him thereby to this privilege, which was esteemed a matter of considerable benefit to a merchantman during time of war;<sup>2</sup> but that being now over and the real benefit of it thereby ceasing, his Royal Highness doth expect that Captain Willshaw should make no further use of that commission,' which Sir J. W. is to remand. Is informed that within these few days he wore the king's jack in the River, notwithstanding his ready promise to the writer at the launching of the Royal Oak that he would not.

1655. [p. 259.] 28 July. S. P. to Sir William Poole.<sup>3</sup>—Has received his of the 25th from the Downs, and will be glad to hear of his arrival at Portsmouth. Will send the receipt he mentions to his lady [1678].

<sup>1</sup> See D. N. B. lx. 295. Although no longer secretary to the lord high admiral (vol. i. p. 40 supra), he appears to have been still secretary to the Duke of York.

<sup>2</sup> This clears up a doubtful point in Charnock, who states that Francis Willshaw was commanding the Concord as early as 1671, adding in a note: 'Through some mistake of a transcriber he is said to have been appointed by King Charles II. on the 4th of August, 1674, captain of the Concord' (Biog. Nav. i. 275). Evidently Charnock did not know that the Concord was not a king's ship but a merchantman, and that Willshaw had been already commanding her as a merchant captain when he received the king's commission; and he also got hold of the wrong year, though the day and month are correctly given. Pepys's Register gives the date 4 Aug. 1673 (supra, vol. i. p. 425), and this is probably right, but in that case the commission, although perhaps promised by the duke, must have been actually given by the king nearly a month after the duke's resignation. Captain Francis Willshaw must not be confused with his brother Thomas Willshaw, commander of the Reserve.

Desires the advice of the board therein. Is also from the lord treasurer (on whom he has attended for the further supply of 3,500*l.* for the galley at Leghorn [1629]) to desire them to send an account of the king's real disbursements in building, furnishing, manning, victualling, &c., that and the other galley.<sup>3</sup> As Lord Vaughan saith it will be September before he be ready to go towards Jamaica,<sup>4</sup> the lords would have them only proceed to the fitting of the Foresight for that voyage, but not enter any men upon her till further order.

Will speak with the lord treasurer about freeing the sold ships from the payment of custom [1681]. Did above a week since tender a commission to the king for Captain Tinker's commanding the Royal Oak, but Sir Robert Robinson 'upon a certain consideration' (which the writer will acquaint the board with when he sees them) obtained of him the carrying of her down to Chatham; upon which another commission [1676] was prepared and signed, but has not been applied for since. Will move the king for the person they mention to be boatswain of the Revenge, and also for a cook for her.

1679. [p. 267.] 8 Aug. S. P. to Captain Harman,<sup>2</sup>
Bristol.—Sends orders for his sailing forthwith to Seine Head with the Drake and Europa, and thence as ordered. Though the king gives him a latitude of staying 8 days at Havre de Grâce in expectation of his convoys, he is not to let the merchants know the utmost of his time, which would but conduce to the slackening their preparations [1688]. The orders enclosed to the Governor of Tangier and Captain Herbert<sup>3</sup> are to use those ships which are and shall come under either of their commands by giving convoy on demand between Tangier and Cadiz. This the writer recommends to his care also, together with giving convoy in his way outward bound as far as will stand with the enclosed orders touching the three ships particularly mentioned, to which he is to add a fourth—the Richard, Thomas Whitney, master—from Havre de Grâce to Lisbon.

‘So many and loud have been the late complaints of merchants against commanders for turning the king's frigates into merchant ships by carrying of goods,<sup>4</sup> to the great scandal of his Majesty's service and discouragement to trade, and so earnest are the resolutions both of his Majesty and the lords of the admiralty duly to punish a fault of such importance, and so strictly forbid not only by the 40th Article of commanders' general instructions but in the particular orders for the most part given to each commander at his going forth, . . . that I think myself obliged in friendship to give you this advice concerning it.’

to the writer by Lord Arlington,<sup>1</sup> relating to a prize lately brought into Dover by a French privateer. Colonel Strode's<sup>2</sup> answer thereto [1645] is that the prize 'was not taken within the reach of the guns of Dover Castle, for that the capture was not made within sight of it, nor any guns fired either by the men-of-war or the prize, much less any from the castle; the truth of which comes asserted to Colonel Strode from Mr. Breames, his deputy there, confirmed by three very express affidavits, so as the caper seems to have much wrong offered him in the detention of his prize complained of by him in his enclosed petition.' Desires him to communicate this to Lord Arlington. Asks also that Captain Herbert,<sup>3</sup> now commander-in-chief in the Straits, may have authority to confirm the late articles of peace with Tripoli made necessary by the late change of its governor [1722], and so judged by the king and lords of the admiralty (Lord Arlington present) some days since at Windsor.

1686. [p. 270.] 10 Aug. *S. 1687. [p. 271.] 10 Aug. S. P. to Mr. Sindrey.—The lords will not continue any protection to him upon other terms than what can stand with the doing right to his creditors, by assigning a time certain within which he will satisfy them. Mr. Hale is contented to give him a month's time longer for his payment, so the writer advises him to find some way of satisfying him, as that without which the lords will withdraw any protection he can pretend to from his relation to the service of the navy.

—Thanks him for his civilities to him at Dover; returned hither yesterday to find his of 23 and 31 Aug. touching the indignities lately done his Majesty upon the Anne yacht and Woolwich sloop. Concerning the former, orders to endeavour to bring in the Ostender are already sent him; the warrant enclosed is for the like to be done to the other two capers who offered the insolency to the sloop. As often as any of the ships appointed for security of the Channel do go forth, he is to call upon the commanders to use all diligence towards obtaining satisfaction. Believes the king and lords will express some mark of their 1729. [p. 288.] 7 Sept. S. P. to Captain Rooke,<sup>2</sup> Holmes.—Has received his of the 6th from Yarmouth Roads, and is glad of his safe arrival from Iceland and that his ship is in good condition, his Majesty having resolved to continue her abroad some time longer as one of the convoys to the herring fishery at Yarmouth. Encloses orders for his coming into the Hope to take in 2 months' victuals with all speed, as the fishermen are near ready to put to sea, and have no convoy.

Postscript.—If it is absolutely necessary for his ship to clean, it must be done at Sheerness.

1730. [p. 289.] 8 Sept. S. P. to Lord Brouncker.<sup>3</sup>—The purser of the Mountagu remains yet in his employment, the matter of the complaint being not so ripened at the board as to have received any sentence from them.

Thanks him also for his advice of Captain Clements<sup>7</sup> being ready for sea. Desires his care of the enclosed order to Captain Carverth,<sup>1</sup> of the Woolwich sloop, at Guernsey.

regard to the concernment of your community in that of the herring-fishery,' have resolved that the Swan and Holmes (lately returned from attending the fishery in Iceland), with the Kitchen yacht, be appointed for the service they desire [1762]. Will also further their other desire of convoy for their ships to the Straits.

1735. [p. 291.] 8 Sept. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has since his return from France seen theirs of 31 Aug. asking his opinion touching the slopseller's warrant. Was guided in the draught thereof by the style of his preceding warrant from his Royal Highness, but doubts not the king will admit any improvement they shall offer to it. But thinks the words in the present draught—'To hold the said employment so long as he shall furnish our fleet with such clothes and at such rates as are appointed by the regulation for furnishing of clothes unto the seamen, or which shall at any time hereafter be appointed for them, and not longer,' together with those in the establishment therein mentioned—'That these several kinds of clothes, viz., Monmouth caps,<sup>1</sup> &c., and these alone be permitted to be sold for the benefit of those seamen that shall want them,' place him to all intents under the restriction they desire.

Desires a little account how the matter stands touching Captain Tyrwhitt<sup>2</sup> in reference to the exceptions lately made to his ship's books, as the king hath of late been much solicited on his behalf with suggestions of his entire innocency, and that the whole of the fraud is imputable to the purser. They being the entire judges of this, the king commands their advice how far to give way to the suit of Captain Tyrwhitt's friends, whose poverty doth much incline his Majesty in his favour if innocent.

The Advice and Sweepstakes being suddenly expected home from Turkey, they are to consider what yards they should be laid up in.

<sup>1</sup> 'Monmouth caps' were flat worsted caps, worn by soldiers and sailors. This reference to a regulation for furnishing clothes to seamen suggests that something of the nature of a uniform was already being provided in the navy.

<sup>2</sup> Captain John Tyrwhitt had been appointed commander of the Adventure in 1670. According to Charnock, he retired from the service soon after (Biog. Nav. i. 50) for a considerable time. In 1686, however, he was appointed to the Tiger (supra, vol. i. p. 417).

1736. [p. 292.] 10 Sept. S. P. to Captain Langley,<sup>1</sup> Harwich.—‘In answer to your late letter touching the payment of the moneys you have been in disburse for the king upon the score of intelligence and prisoners, I am extremely troubled that I am not in condition to give you so good an answer as I could wish and your case deserves, forasmuch as the service to which the same relates came not at all within the cognisance of the lord high admiral or officers of the navy, but was done, as I think you inform me, by the immediate direction of my Lord Arlington<sup>2</sup> with promise of being paid for by himself, as you tell me others for the like service have been, so that my lords of the admiralty do not hold themselves in any wise concerned in providing for your payment unless by my Lord Arlington’s means (who only is able to inform his Majesty of the truth and value of your service) his Majesty might be induced to send his order to my lords of the admiralty to take notice of your said service and give warrant for its payment, which, were it my own case, is all that I think would lie in my power to do towards my satisfaction. So that upon the whole all that I can advise as your friend is that you would apply yourself to my Lord Arlington, by Mr. Bridgeman<sup>3</sup> or who else of those gentlemen about him you use to correspond with, that if his lordship think it not his part to give you satisfaction, he would at least so far represent it to his Majesty as that the service being done by his command my lords of the admiralty may be empowered to do it out of the treasury of the navy.’

1736a. [p. 292.] 10 Sept. S. P. to Captain Harman,<sup>4</sup> Bristol, Tangier.—Hopes this will find him with his outward-bound voyage well despatched, and that he is entered upon the service his Majesty hath last appointed him to with the Drake, ‘our merchants upon the Exchange being very uneasy at this time under the consideration of the danger their ships are exposed to from those of Sallee’ [1692]. As to what he desires touching his going to Cadiz with the Drake to clean, ‘his Majesty seems to suppose that that may as well be done at Tangier, where all necessaries are lodged for you.’

1736*b*. [p. 293.] 10 Sept. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The lords being applied to by Lord Vaughan<sup>1</sup> desiring that 'forasmuch as the quantity of stores, guns, and ammunition which he is obliged to carry along with him to Jamaica is more than can be conveniently stowed in the man-of-war appointed to transport him thither,' some other expedient may be found, the writer is to desire them to peruse the enclosed particulars, and to report to the lords 'whether the Foresight will be able to carry them all without inconvenience, and if not, what may be the most husbandly way of transporting so much of them as the frigate cannot carry.'

Encloses a petition from Captain Billopp [1673], 'wherein, in case he cannot be wholly released of the bargain, he propounds that the ships by him lately bought, and for which he is not able to pay, may be put a second time to sale.' Desires them to consider 'what can be done better on his Majesty's behalf than what he propounds, upon a presumption of his being utterly unable by any effects he can at present be found master of, to give the king real satisfaction for the whole.'

1736*c*. [p. 293.] 10 Sept. S. P. to Captain London, Norwich, in the Downs.—Has received his of the 8th mentioning that his provisions are almost expended, 'which having acquainted his Majesty with,' he has directed Sir John Narbrough<sup>2</sup> to order him 6 weeks' victuals from Dover. The lords do not think fit to increase his complement of men, 'it being the number established for her in time of peace upon home service.'

1737. [p. 294.] 10 Sept. S. P. to Sir James Johnson, at Yarmouth.—Will not give an opinion in the case he desires it, but upon the coming in of a like prize into Yarmouth, and dispute arising concerning the disposal of some of her lading by the Frenchman that took her, it was declared by the judge of the admiralty, grounded upon the 21st article of the Treaty at Breda, that no part of the prize ought to be disposed of in any of his Majesty's ports, more than what appeared to be absolutely necessary for putting her into a condition of sailing to the next port of the prince to which the vessel that took her belongs.

On the arrival of the galley he is to acquaint Sir John Duteil<sup>5</sup> with it, and cause it to be delivered as is directed [1750].

Desires his recollecting what gratuities have at any time been given by the lords commissioners for prizes to commanders of the king's ships for their good service in taking prizes from the enemy, Captain Hobbs<sup>4</sup> having applied himself to his Majesty on that behalf for his service in being at the taking of the East India ships at St. Helena.<sup>5</sup>

1748. [p. 297.] 14 Sept. *S. Hears from Captain Pinn of the Dartmouth that the beef and pork which he lately took in at Kinsale is so very bad that the men cannot eat it ; they are desired to do therein as is best for the king's service. He also writes that the ship hath been so long off the ground that the tallow is washed off of her sides and the ship much water-soaken, which may much prejudice her if not timely prevented ; they are to consider whether she may not be cleaned at Kinsale.

1758. [p. 301.] 17 Sept. S. P. to Captain Wylde,<sup>3</sup> Centurion, at Portsmouth.—Inquiry will be made into the grounds of the ill-usage he and the rest of his Majesty's ships have met with at Cadiz. The king prefers the general benefit of the service, by keeping his ship at the yard where she was designed to be laid up by the navy board, to the particular convenience he propounds in the safe bringing about of his wine, which may be sent about into the River by the dogger [1779.] He is to provide with all despatch for the paying off of his ship by the timely making ready his books, and doing what shall be advised by the commissioner and officers of the yard towards taking out his stores and putting the ship into a condition of being brought into ordinary.

Postscript.—The duke coming home since his writing hereof, entirely approves of what the king has determined, adding that if the dogger be too full to bring the wine it should remain on board him till some other vessel be provided.

1761. [p. 302.] 19 Sept. *S. Orders are sent to the governor [1740] directing the Mary Rose, or the first ship of the king's that shall come thither bound up the Straits, to carry back the said men to Leghorn. Orders will be sent for graving the Dartmouth at Kinsale, and cleaning and fitting the Holmes at Sheerness.

1762. [p. 303.] 19 Sept. S. P. to the Bailiffs of Yarmouth.—The convoys for their fishing vessels are hastening all that may be, the Swan waiting only some fair weather in the Downs to get her victuals on board from Dover, and the Holmes being taking in a supply of victuals at Sheerness. Both will be under way the beginning of next week. The Kitchen yacht being not returned, the Merlin is appointed in her room, who likewise will sail for the River the beginning of next week [1734]. 1766. [p. 304.] 21 Sept. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>1</sup> in the Downs.—Has received his two letters of the 18th, with the enclosed packet to his Majesty from the King of Argeir, which was to let the king know that 'having not heard anything from his Majesty since the peace made by Sir Edward Spragge<sup>2</sup> touching the redemption of English captives there, which by the treaty and Sir Edward's promise they say we obliged ourselves to do, and that upon that consideration it was that they covenanted not to dispose of them otherwise than to the English upon the payment of their ransom, which covenant they have strictly kept to, forbearing to sell them, or employ them otherwise than in the town of Argeir, which is at last, they say, become very troublesome to their patrons, to such a degree that a mutiny or two hath been occasioned upon it, the last of which was not to be allayed but upon promise of this letter to his Majesty; they therefore desire that his Majesty will think fit, in case he expects the continuance of the peace with them, to provide money and ships for the redeeming of the captives before the 30th of November next.' The king has resolved to send enough money to stop the present breach, and give them grounds of expecting more for ransoming the rest, which business may occasion him some work into the Straits, so desires to know his mind concerning it, and the present condition of his ship [1777].

The king concurs with him that Lieutenant Hunt<sup>3</sup> must at least be parted from his captain, and therefore approves of what he has done in taking him on board him [1773].

1770. [p. 306.] 21 Sept. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Captain Herbert<sup>3</sup> writes that, being not able to procure a supply of provisions at Tangier for the Cambridge, he was forced to go to Leghorn for it—a thing 'of too much import to the king to let pass uninquired into, not only with respect to the misreckoning which we seem to have lain under of having a store of provisions actually provided, as well as declared for, at Tangier, but from the disappointment it must necessarily be of to his Majesty that whatever the service is that may call for the use of his ships elsewhere (as it doth at this time at Tangier and the mouth of the Straits in regard of the Sallee men-of-war), they must be driven to go to Leghorn for supply of their victuals.' Desires them therefore to make a strict and speedy inquiry.

1771. [p. 306.] 21 Sept. S. P. to Captain Herbert,<sup>3</sup> at Alicante.—Has received his of 26 Aug. from Leghorn, and is extremely glad to hear of his recovery. The lords are surprised at the want of provisions at Tangier, there having been a quantity long since declared for [1770]. [Next follows a summary of the packet from Algiers as in No. 1766.] The king has resolved to send some money, so the writer gives him advice thereof in order to his making such use of it as he shall see convenient either for his Majesty's or the merchants' service.

The Bristol and Drake are appointed, after their arrival at Tangier, to go towards Sallee to annoy those of that place and secure the king's subjects from them [1720], so he must not expect the Bristol to join him at Alicante.

with his account of the 24th of his deportment towards the Ostenders. Lieutenant Jenifer's<sup>1</sup> absence will be no prejudice to him, 'I being the king's remembrancer no less in behalf of the absent than those that are daily soliciting, as you will find by the majority of those whom his Majesty hath been pleased of late to bestow employments upon, showing that not the importunity of those who daily solicit him, but his regard to the qualifications of the persons, upon the view of the list of pretenders by me shown him upon occasion of every vacancy, hath governed him in his choice.'

1779. [p. 311.] 26 Sept. S. P. to Captain Wylde,<sup>2</sup> at Portsmouth.—Has received his of the 21st with advice of the Deal dogger being come away directly to the Downs without touching at Portsmouth, which having acquainted his Majesty and Royal Highness with, the writer has their directions for sending a yacht about to fetch their wine [1758]. Desires him to send up a journal of his last voyage.

1780. [p. 311.] 26 Sept. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>3</sup> Pearl, Downs.—Will acquaint the king with the condition of his ship when he shall come to the settling of the winter guard, which he will shortly do.

Hope.—Hopes his victuals are come down to him ; is sorry their backwardness hinders his being at his station, where he supposes the Swan now is. He has done very well in advising him of the master of the merchantman's insolent denial of paying the respect due to his Majesty's ship, for which he will be called to a strict account by the lords ; but the writer hopes he will have nothing to retort against any of his officers or company for violence or ill language, a fault which is often found to be the occasion of this sort of neglect in merchantmen.

1784. [p. 313.] 26 Sept. S. P. to Captain Royden,<sup>1</sup> Deptford.—Hopes that according to his instructions he informs the officers of the navy on the state of his ship, and his progress in getting her ready for sea. As to the man arrested, the lords 'will do in his as their practice is in other cases for the discharging of any man that is arrested in the king's service without their leave. But pray let not the party concerned imagine that my lords will strain this power of theirs to countenance any undue practice of his to the prejudice of his creditors ; but expect that if his creditors discharge him from the present arrest and petition their lordships for leave to arrest him, their lordships will not deny it in case the party after a little time given him to that purpose does not give their lordships satisfaction touching the same.'

This is sent by express to you both to the Downs and Portsmouth that we may have certain answer and speedily' [1793, 1799].

1787. [p. 314.] 28 Sept. S. P. to Sir Nathaniel Herne.<sup>1</sup>—Has shown his received this morning to the lord treasurer, who hath directed Mr. Bertie<sup>2</sup> to be upon the Exchange this day to meet him. Sir John Narbrough is ordered from the Downs to Portsmouth, there to refit and victual, which may be about 8 days' work, after which he takes the first wind for Cadiz and so for Argeir [1777].

1788. [p. 315.] 28 Sept. S. P. to Mr. Martin.<sup>3</sup>—Has from all hands (the king himself, as well as Lord Arlington<sup>4</sup> and others) met with a general good liking of his behaviour and discretion in his present difficult employment [1803], with regard both to the honour of the service and the content of the merchants. Thanks him for his present of the lion, which came well to him, and is at this time in the writer's house, 'as tame as you sent him, and as good company.' Acquaints him with the contents of a packet received about 7 days since from the king and government of Argeir, which was at sea by an Argeir man-of-war put on board an English vessel bound homewards, and delivered to Sir John Narbrough in the Downs, and contains 'an absolute demand of the redemption of all the English slaves before the end of November' [1766]. Though it does not appear by the terms of the treaty that his Majesty is bound to any certain limitation of time, yet 'so tender is he of giving any the least occasion of a breach with that government,' as that he hath resolved upon sending of the money by Sir John Narbrough in the Henrietta, so that he may be at Argeir before the expiration of the time set, he being at this time preparing himself for his voyage, and the money provided [1786]. wind and weather; 'the king hath thought it expedient to give the government and you his minister advice of this his resolution' by this express sent overland to Marseilles, where a ketch (sent thither on another occasion) lies in readiness to receive it [1789]. Hopes 'the amity between us and that government will receive no interruption, it importing us very much that it should not.' Will endeavour to obtain the reimbursement of what he laid out for giving satisfaction for the two slaves carried away by the Plymouth and Dover, a misbehaviour the king and lords 'are to the utmost degree dissatisfied with, and are resolved to prevent it by the strictest prohibition they can give against it, and the severest punishments they can inflict against any that shall be hereafter found guilty of committing the like crimes.'

1789. [p. 316.] 28 Sept. S. P. to Captain Anguish, Deptford ketch, at Marseilles.—The king has as yet given no orders about the wine which he is to receive on board, but orders are enclosed for him to lose no time in transporting letters to Argeir [1788, 1802, 1913].

1790. [p. 317.] 28 Sept. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Sir John Narbrough writes from the Downs that he intended to sail last night towards Portsmouth to refit, and that he doubts the greatest delay will be in getting his provisions on board in case the iron-bound cask for the beer be not timely made ready, of which he will need near 50 tun. Desires them to quicken the victualler, and to take care in supplying him with such boatswain's and carpenter's stores as they shall judge fitting for the voyage. They are to send Sir J. N. word to what number his complement is to be increased, and to take care for the timely procuring of them.

1798. [p. 318.] 29 Sept. S. P. to Sir Richard Munden.<sup>1</sup>—Encloses orders for his succeeding Sir John Narbrough in his command in the Downs, and recommends to his special care the protection of trade, 'now so much annoyed by the privateers of our neighbours.' Desires to know where Captain Carter of the Crown is, as no answer has been received to an express sent away on Sunday evening upon an affair of extraordinary importance [1786]. He is to press Captain London<sup>2</sup> to the speedy execution of the orders sent him last night for his repair to Portsmouth.

1794. [p. 319.] 29 Sept. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough.<sup>3</sup>—Has written to the navy officers to quicken his victuals and stores [1790]; and has sent the king's orders to the master of the ordnance to supply his demand of ammunition and gunner's stores. He will receive advice from the navy officers as to the number of men he is to bear in this present voyage.

Postscript.—Since writing, has received his second letter of the 27th, and hopes this will find him well arrived at Portsmouth. His Majesty and Royal Highness designing to set forth for Newmarket to-morrow, the writer is commanded to bring him to confer with them there.

1795. [p. 320.] 30 Sept. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Encloses Commissioner Deane's<sup>4</sup> propositions for building two ships for the king [1796, 1797], desiring them to treat with him touching the terms thereof, and report to the lords with all speed, and especially on the method propounded by him of contracting for their rigging, apparel, and stores of all sorts for a 6 months' voyage, excepting the gunner's stores—a method not heretofore at any time practised in the navy. Desires them, as soon as they have completed their inquiry into the state of the victuals at Kinsale [1750], to let him know what order will be necessary from the lords touching the disposal of so much 1800. [p. 322.] 1 Oct. *S. 1802. [p. 323.] 1 Oct. S. P. to Captain Anguish, Deptford ketch, Marseilles.—His liberty of going to Livorne contrary to orders has occasioned much trouble to the king and lords, by rendering uncertain his being at Marseilles at the time of the arrival of the express of the 28th [1789]. Encloses a copy of a letter sent him this day to Livorne [1803]. He to use the utmost diligence in transporting the packet to Argeir, if not already done.

1803. [p. 324.] 1 Oct. The same to the same, Deptford ketch, at Livorne [1802].—A packet having been sent him to Marseilles [1789], grounded upon a certain expectation of finding him there, where by his instructions of 15 June he was to stay until he received orders from the consul for his departure, it was matter of no little surprise to learn from his of 15 Sept., which came to hand yesterday, that he had adventured to go to Livorne upon pretence of having from thence a supply of provisions, and an inducement given him by the merchants that no wines could be ready to be shipped within 6 weeks, though nothing in his instructions gave him any ground to conceive that his errand thither was to fetch wine, nor (as appears from his own letter) was he in any present want of provisions ; ‘an action which, besides the breach of orders, is likely to have many irreparable consequences of prejudice both to his Majesty and his subjects' in case the packet for Argeir should happen by his absence not to arrive time enough to prevent them. This comes to tell him that (leaving him to answer for this his proceeding at another time), in case this shall find him at Livorne he is to apply himself to Mr. Ball, merchant there, to whom a duplicate of his Majesty's letter to the government and another of Mr. Secretary Williamson's<sup>1</sup> to the consul at Argeir was directed, and having delivered it with all speed to Mr. Martin, his Majesty's consul there [1788], and having performed such further orders as he shall receive from the said consul, he is to return to Marseilles for further orders [1913].

The king and lords desire a particular of when he received the express and despatched his answer [1811]. To lose no time in his repair to Portsmouth.

1809. [p. 333.<sup>1</sup>] 2 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Has received theirs of the 29th touching the ground of the Cambridge and want of provisions at Tangier, whence this only satisfaction seems at present to be collected, that probably there was a sufficiency of victuals in that place for victualling that ship, but whether of victuals provided for the navy only or in common for the navy and garrison doth not appear. It may be thought useful for the time to come to have the bills of lading express what is intended for the garrison and what for the sea-service, so that the board may not be misled to a dependence of victuals there for the use of the navy, while the lords commissioners for Tangier by their accounts may have grounds to judge that those very provisions are belonging to the garrison.

1810. [p. 327.] 3 Oct. S. P. to the Lord Treasurer.—Has inquired into the reason of Sir John Holmes's<sup>2</sup> bill not being paid, and finds that since the date of it only 2 bills have been paid of the like kind for ships bought by the king—the Hunter and the Swan—and these by moneys especially appointed the lords.

1811. [p. 327.] 3 Oct. *S. 1814. [p. 329.] 3 Oct. S. P. to Sir John Werden,<sup>2</sup> Newmarket.—Finds by the Downs list that the Henrietta sailed yesterday for Portsmouth. Has just received a letter from Captain Russell<sup>3</sup> of the Swallow, who is arrived in the Downs from the Straits (having left the Bonadventure behind him † for 6 days to N.W. of †<sup>4</sup> Sallee), and brought Lady Middleton<sup>5</sup> home with him [1720]. Desires him to move his Royal Highness to prevail on the king to bestow the office of clerk of the passage at Dover on Mr. Tiddeman, son of the late Sir Thomas Tiddeman, upon the death of Mr. Bastincke, who lies speechless, if not dead. This is out of regard for the memory of his father, and since he finds on inquiry that Mr. T. is 'reported to be a very worthy, honest man, well esteemed among his neighbours, and one every way fit for the employment.'

It is needful that this should be ascertained for preventing what his Majesty suffered in the late case of Sir Jonathan Atkins [1646], whose retinue rose from the 20 first demanded to 40 when he came on board the St. David, 'where they are now all eating at his Majesty's charge.'

Doubts not that he will hear from the officers of the navy of the addition of men to be allowed him. Desires him to repair hither, whence the writer is to accompany him to Newmarket to attend his Majesty there for his fuller instructions.

1822. [p. 333.] 3 Oct. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, Yarmouth.—Wonders at the slackness of the town in supplying him with pilots. The king approves Sir John Narbrough's removing his lieutenant [1766], he finding cause enough for it, though there is no time for a court-martial, which cannot yet be denied the lieutenant in case he shall demand it on his coming in [1862].

1823. [p. 334.] 3 Oct. S. P. to the Mayor and Jurats of Dover.—Has by the hands of Mr. Dethick received theirs of 28 Sept., whereto, by his Majesty's absence, the writer can give no other answer than that he will endeavour to promote what they desire towards putting their harbour into a state of repair and security. Cannot undertake the settling of it in the particular method they propound of the composition trade, as being a matter wherein too many public considerations are concerned [1824].

1824. [p. 334.] 3 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Stockdale,<sup>2</sup> at Dover.—Has received his of the 28th, with the enclosed state of the harbour of Dover. Thinks it of great moment to the king if that place could be made capable of receiving the king's ships in time of war, as it might be with no great charge; but does not know what to expect from the method propounded by the mayor and jurats [1823]—namely, that of the composition trade; it being a point much controverted of late, and such as the king and council have hitherto thought fit to respite the giving any determination in. But the mayor refers the writer to Mr. Dethick, with whom he will at his first leisure confer thoroughly concerning the whole matter.

Norwich, Downs.—To repair to Portsmouth.

1829. [p. 337.] 6 Oct. S. P. to Captain Clements,
Greyhound, at Portsmouth.—To return to the Downs and follow Sir Richard Munden's<sup>5</sup> orders.

1830. [p. 337.] 6 Oct. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>6</sup> Pearl, Downs.—Sir Richard Munden<sup>5</sup> is solely entrusted with the employing of the ships under his command, who does not approve his going to St. Malo with one single galliot [1833].

1831. [p. 338.] 6 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Neale, postmaster at Deal.—There hath happened a delay of much consequence to the king in an express sent on 27 Sept., at 10 at night, to Captain Carter [1786, 1799]. Desires to know how it came about that that express, which appears by the postmaster of Canterbury's hand to have passed him about 11 the next morning, 'has no signification on it under your hand when it came to you, but 'tis subscribed by Captain Carter that he received it at Deal Castle about 10 at night, and not sooner.' Desires to know also why Captain Carter's answer despatched between 10 and 11 the next morning (being the 29th) is not by his label thereto owned to come to his hand at Deal till past 4 in the afternoon [1845].

1832. [p. 338.] 6 Oct. S. P. to Captain Carter,<sup>7</sup>
Downs.—Desires his reply to the same questions [1831].

1833. [p. 339.] 6 Oct. S. P. to Sir Richard Munden,<sup>1</sup> Downs.—He will be supplied with 2 months' victuals from Dover. Thinks his answer to Mr. Stock well-advised, it seeming much too far for one of the few ships he has to be spared to a single galliot [1830]. She can take the benefit of the convoy of the next of the king's ships bound for Portsmouth, and obtain convoy thence to her port [1854]. He is to inform the writer why the Crown is not gone to Portsmouth to be paid off, the Henrietta and Norwich having, though without full success, done their parts towards getting thither.

1834. [p. 340.] 8 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king purposes to send some person with Sir John Narbrough<sup>2</sup> to join with him and the consul at Argeir in adjusting the payments for the redemption of the slaves [1766], and the person designed by the lord treasurer is Sir Thomas Clutterbuck,<sup>3</sup> whom they are to put in a condition of departure as soon as the Henrietta (which the writer hopes is arrived at Portsmouth) shall be in readiness for the voyage.

1835. [p. 340.] 8 Oct.<sup>4</sup> The same to the same.—The king having bestowed upon the bearer the 'boatswainship' of the Princess, the lords on his request allow him a month's time to settle his concerns at Portsmouth and fetch his clothes thence, provided that in the meantime he provides some other person to the satisfaction of the board to perform his duty.

1836. [p. 340.] 8 Oct. S. P. to Captain Gallop, Thomas and Francis, Downs.—Has received his of the 6th, and is glad of his safe arrival. He is to bring his ship as high as Blackwall, and make up his books for paying off.

1837. [p. 341.] 8 Oct. S. P. to Sir Richard Munden,<sup>1</sup> Downs.—To see that Captain Gallop loses no time [1836].

1838. [p. 341.] 8 Oct. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, at Yarmouth.—Hopes he takes care that 'while the Dutch do their parts of civility towards his Majesty's flag,' he does not 'impose upon them anything by way of

'My meaning is in reference to that of the 12 barrels of herrings apiece which you have threatened them with the taking, and some of them offered the giving you by way of composition for their not being carried into Yarmouth; in which I doubt not but your discretion will direct you to the guiding yourself by the practice of the sea in that case.'

1839. [p. 342.] 8 Oct. S. P. to Captain Wylde,<sup>1</sup> Centurion, Portsmouth.—Has received his of the 6th, with his journal [1818]. The Cleveland is on her way to him, being to stop at Rye to deliver some things of Lady Shrewsbury's, who is going over thence in the Portsmouth for France [1818].

1840. [p. 342.] 8 Oct. S. P. to Captain Baker,<sup>2</sup> Merlin, Yarmouth.—Hopes he will take the best care he can for having the upper works of his yacht caulked, for the good of his company as well as for preventing the injury she may receive by want of it during the present service, which being over, it can be better done in one of the king's yards.

1841. [p. 343.] 9 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king's warrant hath some days since been sent to the master of the ordnance [1815] for the speedy putting on board the ship they have hired to that purpose the guns and shot which are with other stores and ammunition to be sent to Jamaica with Lord Vaughan,<sup>3</sup> who now waits only the readiness of his Majesty's ship to carry him. Has by Sir John Werden<sup>4</sup> obtained the king's directions concerning the number of men allowed Lord Vaughan for his retinue and to be transported at the king's charge, which his Majesty limits to 100 [1815]. Will inform himself whether the king designs any stops for the Foresight on her way to Jamaica. Has heard from Captain Wetwang<sup>5</sup> of his arrival with the Newcastle and Success in the Bay of Bulls in Newfoundland, on 22 Aug. He greatly complains of 'the badness of his sails and ropes, the first being all mildewed, one of his main topsails splitting five times, and a new one twice.' The latter also 'are rotten stuff, not worth above 18s. a cwt.' They are to satisfy themselves where the blame is to be laid for the badness of these stores. The Success he also says is very leaky.

1842. [p. 344.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Wivell, at Dover.—Will make what use he can of his advice touching the Port of Dover [1824].

1843. [p. 344.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Stockdale,<sup>1</sup> at Dover.—Will use his advice about Dover [1824].

1844. [p. 344.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Tiddeman, Dover.—Having not yet received any answer from court about his business, can do nothing more till the place is actually void [1814, 1820].

1845. [p. 345.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Neale, postmaster, Deal.—Is sorry that what he calls his first and only failure should be in a matter of such importance [1831]. Will lay the matter 'nakedly' before the king and lords [1978]. As to what he writes of being overpressed with despatches of this kind, saying he has had three since Sunday last, there hath not been so many in so little time this 3 years, the writer taking particular care never to make use of an express on business that can bear the staying for an ordinary post [1875].

1846. [p. 345.] 9 Oct. S. P. to Captain Tyte.<sup>2</sup>—To carry Sir Edward Brett's servant to Holland with Lady Temple.

The bottom of the leaf is torn across here, and has been at one time mended with red sealing-wax.

1847. [p. 346.] 12 Oct. S. P. to Captain Sanderson,<sup>3</sup> Portsmouth yacht.—To transport the Earl of Plymouth<sup>4</sup> to Calais, and this done to return to Greenwich.

1848. [p. 346.] 12 Oct. S. P. to Captain Gunman, Anne yacht, at Calais.—To stay till the Marquis de Vitry arrive at Calais, and then to transport him as his orders direct [1801].

<sup>2</sup> Captain George Tyte was commander of the Richmond yacht (supra, vol. i. p. 417). Charnock gives the date of his appointment to this command as 18 Jan., 1675 (Biog. Nav. i. 300), but this is apparently by confusion with a later commission to the Deptford ketch (supra, vol. i. p. 417). Both Charnock and Pepys's Register spell the name 'Tyete'; Pepys's index to vol. iii. of the Admiralty Letters spells it 'Tite.'

1849. [p. 346.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Captain London, Norwich, at Portsmouth.—Hopes he is near despatched in his cleaning and revictualling, so as to be ready to execute the enclosed orders for sailing to the coast of Ireland.

1850. [p. 346.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Captain Dickenson,<sup>1</sup> Hunter.—Encloses orders for his sailing to the Downs.

1851. [p. 347.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Colonel Piper.<sup>2</sup>—Thanks for his advices.

1852. [p. 347.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Captain Country,<sup>3</sup> Roebuck, Sheerness.—Encloses orders for his further proceedings. Hopes he will improve for the service the kindness of the king and lords in keeping him still in employment.

1853. [p. 347.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Sir Richard Munden,<sup>4</sup> Downs.—Will take notice to Captain Carter<sup>5</sup> of his failure to attend his commander-in-chief all the time he was in the Downs. 'His ship is now paid off, and Sir John Narbrough<sup>6</sup> come up hither.'

1854. [p. 347.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Stock, at Dover.—The Greyhound being already come into the Downs from Portsmouth, she cannot be appointed to convoy his galliot to St. Malo [1833]. If she can wait at Portsmouth till the Norwich is ready to sail [1849] she can see her safe to her port.

1855. [p. 348.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Sir Robert Robinson,<sup>7</sup> Chatham.—Thanks for his advice of the 8th of his arrival with the Royal Oak at Chatham; is sorry the voyage is so chargeable. As it is known she is brought thither to be laid up and brought into ordinary, no further orders are needed. His taking away the king's colours worn by the merchantman is approved; the lords will speedily summon her master to give an account of his presumption.

1856. [p. 348.] 13 Oct. S. P. to Captain Dawson,<sup>8</sup> Advice, at Portsmouth.—Has received his of the 9th, and congratulates him on his safe return. To make ready his books for paying off, and to send up his journal.

They are to depend upon a warrant for it as soon as the king comes to town and the lords meet, the consequence thereof being such as can be of no inconveniency to his Majesty in case they should not approve of it.

1858. [p. 349.] 14 Oct. S. P. to Captain Gallop, Thomas and Francis, at Blackwall.—On his arrival at Blackwall, he is to attend the navy board to receive their directions about putting his ship out of further charge to his Majesty.

1859. [p. 350.] 14 Oct. S. P. to Captain Sanderson,<sup>2</sup> Portsmouth yacht.—Does not find that the commanders of yachts transporting the Duke of Monmouth have ever had any directions for wearing the flag, so if it has been worn, it has either been without order, or by some verbal order from the king, signified either by himself or by his Royal Highness, then lord high admiral. The Earl of Plymouth<sup>3</sup> cannot therefore expect it upon any other terms [1847].

1860. [p. 350.] 14 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Neale, Postmaster at Deal.—Will give him timely notice if the king or lords think fit to summon him up hither to answer for the miscarriage of the express [1845]. Desires to know some further particulars of where Captain Carter was when the <sup>1</sup> Sir John Ernle was comptroller of the stores from 1671 to 1676 (supra, vol. i. pp. 17, 41). Nevertheless he had been appointed commander of the Foresight 21 July, 1674 (ib. p. 348). 1861. [p. 351.] 15 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Believing that the king may at his return order the Roebuck upon some service abroad, the writer desires them to give order for her despatch.

1862. [p. 351.] 15 Oct. S. P. to Captain Binning, Swan, at Yarmouth.—Doubts not by what he understands from Sir John Narbrough<sup>1</sup> but he will be well prepared to justify himself in his proceedings towards his lieutenant, in case he shall desire its being brought to a court-martial [1822]. At the king's coming to town at the end of this week, the writer will give his messenger an opportunity of delivering his present of the eagle. Is glad the season proves so well for our fishermen. Captain Rooke<sup>2</sup> has written about his ship's leakiness, but with hopes that he may be able to keep at sea. If not, the writer supposes the lords will order him into the River, his Majesty having no action at this time at Harwich.

1863. [p. 352.] 15 Oct. S. P. to Captain Rooke,<sup>3</sup> at Yarmouth.—To give timely notice in case the leakiness of his ship shall grow upon him.

1864. [p. 352.] 16 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will get their estimate signed of the charge of transporting the stores and passengers going with Lord Vaughan to Jamaica [1841], and then transmit it to the treasurer of the navy in order to his laying it before the lord treasurer for money. To inquire into the defects of Captain Wetwang's sails at his return; as also to take some notice concerning the leakiness of the Success [1841], it seeming to be 'much the same case with that of the Gloucester, saving that here the carpenter of the ship is in being, who should be best able to inform the master shipwright in all the complaints of his ship, whereas the miscarriage in the other was excused by the death of the old carpenter.' Will this day represent Sir Thomas Clutterbuck's<sup>3</sup> case to the lord treasurer, and when the board shall transmit particulars of the extraordinary payments they are obliged to make out of their weekly allowance upon the 200,000*l*.

1867. [p. 353.] 16 Oct. *S. To lose no time in getting into the Downs, where further orders will meet him.

1870. [p. 355.] 19 Oct. S. P. to Captain Anguish, Deptford ketch, at Leghorn.—Encloses a copy of his of 1 Oct. directed both to Marseilles and Leghorn [1802, 1803]. He will not escape a great deal of blame for adventuring to go away without orders. Encloses orders for his meeting Sir John Narbrough at Argeir, who within very few days will depart hence with moneys for the redemption of the slaves there [1766]. Sir John Narbrough is just upon his departure in the Henrietta,<sup>1</sup> with orders to take in moneys at Cadiz [1874], and from thence to proceed towards Argeir. Slaves that have been taken in strangers' ships are not to be redeemed, as not required by treaty and but an encouragement to the king's subjects to enter themselves into the service of strangers to be redeemed at his cost. The king and lords depend much upon his discretion and good husbandry, so as that the peace may be preserved with that people, and his Majesty not imposed upon in the rates of the slaves.

1872. [p. 356.] 19 Oct. 'Sent to Captain Anguish at Marseilles for conveyance.' The same to the same.—Since writing the above [1871], has received his of 12 Aug. No ships have been sent into the Straits since the writer's time of serving the king in this station (nor shall for the time to come) without instructions to appear before Argeir as often as with any conveniency they may.

to be provided and sent to Portsmouth by to-morrow night's post to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>1</sup> to be by him made use of at Cadiz [1871] in case the first should not be come to hand at his arrival there, a letter being also added from the merchants here to their correspondents at Cadiz that in that case the second bills may be paid sooner than at the days of sight given in the bills, to prevent the inconvenience of Sir John Narbrough's having to stay out the whole time. Presents are also to be provided to the governments of Tunis and Tripoli to the value of 200*l.* each, to be sent by waggon to Portsmouth on Thursday next. Which presents not being to be provided by the navy, the writer cannot inform him by what hand the same is usually done, but supposes he will understand it from one of the secretaries' offices.<sup>2</sup>

1876. [p. 358.] 19 Oct. S. P. to Captain Clements, Greyhound, Downs.—Has received his of the 15th, signifying his arrival in the Downs and his desires for an increase to his number of men, in which he is not to expect any answer hence without the opinion first had of the officers of the navy, to whom he is referred, and this the rather because at this very time the navy board hath before it the general consideration of the manning of the whole fleet.<sup>4</sup>

1879. [p. 359.] 20 Oct. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>2</sup> Portsmouth.—Encloses the king's instructions about redeeming the captives [1766], just now put into his hands by Mr. Secretary Williamson.<sup>3</sup> Fears the Roebuck will not see him till she overtakes him at Cadiz, though she will call in her way at Portsmouth and Plymouth. Cannot tell him till to-morrow of the advance made in the despatch either of Mr. Brisbane<sup>4</sup> or the presents [1874]. Recommends to his special kindness the captives mentioned in the enclosed letter from Sir Nathaniel Herne.<sup>5</sup> The list also of ships enclosed from Sir John Frederick<sup>6</sup> is recommended to him for his care in reference to their particular safety, as any of them shall happen to fall in his way and stand in need of it.

1880. [p. 360.] 21 Oct. *S. <sup>7</sup> Consul at Genoa [1699].

I am very glad to find you beforehand with me in your observation of the coldness of his reply to what I had on his Majesty's behalf wrote to him [1699] with no little earnestness on a subject that administers so much matter of complaint against the king's commanders, and justly too, as that of taking in merchants' goods<sup>1</sup>—an evil never likely to be thoroughly rectified while those who concern themselves most in complaining shall decline the giving his Majesty their necessary assistance in convicting; but instead thereof do make it their endeavours to tempt the king's commanders with pretence of want of shipping and perishableness of their commodities to take in their goods at under freights, and then complain of them for it. Witness not only Haddock's case<sup>2</sup> at Malaga,<sup>3</sup> who could produce the consul's letter there pressing him to what he did, but even the commander of the Swallow itself (that has occasioned so much clamour all this summer) produces (as they tell me) a very large and earnest declaration from divers merchants at Livorne of the necessities urging them to desire his favour and aid in the bringing home what is come by him. And which is yet more unsatisfactory to me in reference to Mr. Legatt, he takes no notice in this his answer to what I had so particularly desired of him of that great miscarriage of our commanders in giving convoy to strangers, and permitting them to wear the king our master's colours, which he himself in a former letter of the 15th August last (before I had asked it) had expressly charged our commanders with, which seems a dealing very unlikely ever to help us out of the inconveniency we are discoursing of, and I doubt not but Mr. Legatt will be told it in such a manner as will not be very easy to him [1936]. Nor do I doubt (even without his help) to bring it about that the merchants abroad may find as little satisfaction in tempting as our commanders in being tempted to the breaking of their instructions in a matter so injurious to the honour of his Majesty's service and destructive to the discipline of it' [1995].

1883. [p. 362.] 22 Oct. S. P. to Captain Royden.<sup>3</sup>—To acknowledge his of the 21st giving notice of his arrival in the Downs, whence Sir Richard Munden<sup>4</sup> will order him out to sea as the service shall require.

1884. [p. 362.] 23 Oct. S. P. to Captain Country,<sup>5</sup> Downs.—Encloses a copy of the orders lately sent him at Sheerness. To use all imaginable diligence in compliance therewith, Sir John Narbrough<sup>6</sup> having been now at Portsmouth 3 days (where he expects him), ready to proceed to the Straits [1766]. As to his want of men (by reason of sickness), the king 'has not in any one case thought fit to issue any press-warrants since the close of the war, nor would it be a laudable thing in you in time of peace to be found to need it; therefore pray make the best shift you can with your present number until you come to Sir John Narbrough, by whose means I doubt not but you will be supplied out of some of his Majesty's ships you may meet with at sea.'

1885. [p. 363.] 24 Oct. S. P. to Captain Pinn, Dartmouth, Kinsale.—The officers of the navy will supply him with sails.

1886. [p. 363.] 24 Oct. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland,<sup>7</sup> Dragon.—His desire for an increase to his complement is referred to the officers of the navy.

1887. [p. 363.] 24 Oct. S. P. to the Bailiffs of Yarmouth.—The two ships designed for the convoy of the ships bound with herrings to the Straits being now near ready, the writer desires to know when the fish ships that go from their town will be ready to depart for the Downs, where the convoy is to take them up.

1889. [p. 364.] 24 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Pett,<sup>2</sup> Woolwich. —According to his desires, will move the king that the Portsmouth yacht may be sent down to Woolwich to be graved. It is above 10 days since the Norwich arrived at Portsmouth to be refitted; supposes she is ready by this time to go to sea.

1890. [p. 365.] 24 Oct. S. P. to Sir John Narbrough,<sup>3</sup> at Portsmouth.—The king and lords are extremely well satisfied with the readiness of his ship to take the benefit of the first wind. Is sorry for the grounds he seems to have for fearing that his provisions may not prove good; will speak with the officers of the navy, though too late to give any present relief [1903]. The Roebuck has been in the Downs since Thursday, waiting only a wind to bring her after him. Has this evening heard from the lord treasurer that Sir Philip Lloyd,<sup>4</sup> on whom his lordship rested for the despatch of the bills of exchange and the presents [1874], hath happened to let it be undone, even to this time; the consequence whereof may prove so inconvenient, and the writer has so expressed to the lord treasurer the moment of it, that the bills are just now come and are enclosed [1903], with an assurance from Mr. Fleetwood, one of my lord's secretaries, that the presents are already bought and shall be sent away towards Portsmouth on Monday, if not to-morrow. To deliver the enclosed to Mr. Brisbane.<sup>5</sup> Sends orders to the Quaker ketch for her coming home to England, unless if he finds her at Cadiz he thinks fit to take her with him to Argeir. He is to help the Roebuck to some men [1884]. At the desire of Sir John Frederick and Sir Nathaniel Herne,<sup>6</sup> adds Richard Dyer, a master's mate, taken in the ship Concord, to those captives specially recommended to his kindness [1879].

Is sorry the merchants encourage them to it by making written applications to them for taking in of merchandise; desires he will, as far as he can, put a stop to these temptations.

1894. [p. 368.] 26 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Ball.—Desires that he and his friends will cease soliciting the captains to carry their goods [1893]. Thanks for his advices of the present state of affairs at Messina.

1896. [p. 368.] 27 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The Norwich is to be supplied at Portsmouth but with 2 months' victuals, with orders to take in as much more as they think fit of those remaining at Kinsale [1795, 1807]. The king and lords will doubtless concur in their advice about leaving the provisions that remain there unlikely to be timely disposed of to the victuallers upon the terms of their contract, and that Captain Pinn<sup>6</sup> make satisfaction to the king for such loss thereon as has been occasioned by his not obtaining orders in the taking in of the said provisions [1902].

1899. [p. 370.] 28 Oct. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king orders, as they propose, that the complement of the Norwich be increased to 95 (the number appointed her on foreign service in time of peace) during the time she shall be employed this winter on the coast of Ireland.

Postscript.—To remind them that a letter of credit is to be provided for Sir John Narbrough's<sup>3</sup> 200*l.* contingent money at Cadiz, and sent down to him to Portsmouth by express, his stay at Cadiz being so short that it will not reach him there in time if sent overland.

1900. [p. 370.] 28 Oct. S. P. to Mr. Stock, Dover.—On the coming in of Sir Richard Munden,<sup>4</sup> Captain Dickenson<sup>5</sup> is to command in the Downs, from whom the king and lords expect no less care in that business on behalf of trade.

1902. [p. 371.] 28 Oct. *S. Foreseeing that they will not issue any orders till they have the opinion of the board, and considering the readiness wherein all matters will very soon be for Lord Vaughan's departure,<sup>2</sup> the writer thought it would conduce to the saving time to desire a word from them on the matter. Reminds them of John Leake, 'he seeming a very able and bred seaman,' who lost his leg last year in the Resolution, and was upon his petition referred to them for a berth to be found him in one of the ships going out, so soon as room could be found for him by the late establishment in that case.<sup>3</sup> His Majesty, 'designing to send a message forthwith to Surinam to advise his subjects there what is in doing here, and of which they may shortly expect the fruits by their having ships sent to transport them and their effects from thence, according to the late treaty with the United Provinces in that particular,' they are to consider 'the most speedy and husbandly way' of conveying letters thither [1923, 2031].

1918. [p. 376.] 3 Nov. S. P. to Sir Thomas Allin.<sup>1</sup>—Tidings were brought to court last night from Leghorn, not only of Captain Anguish's errand from Marseilles—namely, to bring merchants' goods, as appears by the very printed bills of entries in the custom-house there, and that thereby his Majesty's letters sent by express to Marseilles [1788, 1789] have missed of the conveyance depended on from the Deptford ketch—but that since his arrival at Leghorn he had been prevailed with by the merchants there to put out to sea again on an occasion of theirs, in his proceeding whereon he happened to run upon a rock, and but for the assistance of some fishermen which came in to his succour, had there perished; and though escaping, yet the vessel is put out of a condition of giving present conveyance to the duplicate sent to Leghorn [1802, 1803]. 'At which (accompanied with so many aggravations) his Majesty was so moved (and I cannot but say with much reason) as that he immediately commanded that Sir John Narbrough<sup>2</sup> should have power sent him that night upon his meeting with the said ketch to displace her present captain,<sup>3</sup> and appoint another in his room to bring her home, which accordingly was done' [1916, 1919].

Encloses a letter to Captain Country [1917], commander of the Roebuck, who will give him passage to Sir John Narbrough, either at Portsmouth or Cadiz. If he accepts the command, he is to pursue the instructions formerly given to Captain Anguish to bring wine from Marseilles for the king [1803], but first to perform what orders he shall receive from Sir John Narbrough.

having thus arrested him without the knowledge and leave of the lords, that he has promised to give order for his discharge. 'I do advise you to make good your promise in your letter to me of paying him the money within 3 or 4 days, I having in confidence thereof undertaken for it and will see it made good, it being in no wise fit for you to think that your relation to the king's service should protect you from doing right to private men, especially while you are neglecting that service by lying in town while you should be attending it at Gravesend, the king's service being as well able to bear with your absence in the Poultry Counter as at the Star Tavern on Fish-Street Hill.' Besides, though the bond became forfeited but at Michaelmas, yet it was for a tavern debt contracted several years ago. As to his creditor's contempt of the lord admiral's warrant, the lords will do what is fitting therein.

1982. [p. 385.] 11 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Captain Colt<sup>1</sup> having earnestly desired to have a carpenter allowed him for the Vulture sloop, and being content to have him without a servant, and to be reckoned as one of the 10 to which the sloop is limited for this voyage with the help of what is to be supplied out of the Foresight, a warrant is issued to a carpenter named by the said captain. He presseth also for a chirurgeon, which being taken in the same manner will occasion very little increase of charge to the king, and may be but necessary for the health of the company on such a voyage; the writer therefore supposes the board will let him be supplied with one in usual course. Has lately heard that the boatswain of Sheerness Yard 'makes difficulty of doing anything relating to his Majesty's service at the direction of the master attendant out of the gates of the yard': the board are to give what directions they shall think needful, as also that the Ann and Christopher's company may on all occasions be ready to give their assistance in anything relating to the king's service there. Desires to know what construction is made at the pay-table of the king's warrants for bearing midshipmen extraordinary on his ships—whether to making them supernumeraries above the whole complement of the ships' companies, or only supernumeraries in qualifying such persons to midshipmen's pay above the ordinary number of midshipmen allowed: supposes the latter is what the king means. The lord privy seal<sup>1</sup> last council day obtained the making free of the 4 ships the board last sold, so that it remains only that somebody attend the clerk of the council for the order.

1933. [p. 386.] 11 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Lawrence, shipwright's assistant at Chatham.—A complaint has lately come to the lords against him from Mr. Loton, the minister of his parish and of the ordinary of the king's navy, which they have committed to the writer to accommodate, 'without the occasioning that dishonour which it must be of to his Majesty's service no less than to your particulars, to have two such officers as you are contending at law together in actions of scandal and schism, for of that nature seem to be the matters now in difference between you.' Will endeavour, if they think good, to decide it, and for that purpose will receive a statement from each; but if either be undesirous of his interposing, he will apply again to the lords for their further directions [1934, 1996].

1934. [p. 386.] 11 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Loton, minister at Chatham [1933].—Has communicated his of 29 Oct. to the lords, who will at no time deny the favour of remedy at law against any who shall abuse the protection given them by their relation to the king's service. But in this case, as in all others, they do first think it their parts to satisfy themselves how far that protection is presumed upon, before they expose the service to the interruption which attendances on suits of law may occasion thereto; and as both parties have dependence on the navy, they have commanded the writer to examine and decide the case, if the parties are willing [1996].

1935. [p. 387.] 12 Nov. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland,<sup>2</sup> Dragon.—The officers of the navy will reconsider his present complement. Fears that the number of midshipmen extraordinary and volunteers may render his complement 'less effectual than it would be were they all of equal ability and disposition for labour with the ordinary true seamen.' Desires his thoughts on this.

1986. [p. 387.] 12 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Legatt, consul at Genoa.—The king and lords are much dissatisfied with his return to what was demanded of him about the king's ships carrying merchants' goods [1881], 'it being a point wherein the honour of his Majesty's service seems as much concerned as any other falling within your cognisance, by how much the liberty herein taken by commanders of violating all orders and instructions, and bringing down the dignity of his Majesty's ships, is thereby exposed to the observation and censure of foreign princes and people, besides the other great prejudices his Majesty receives from the loss of time, service, and expense attending his ships whilst employed on their captains' private occasions.'

As to the other evils he mentions 'of merchant ships of foreign nations taken into the protection of English men-of-war, to the giving just matter of quarrel to the Turks, and that of the said merchant strangers wearing of our colours also with permission of the king's captains, nothing can be done at home effectually for the remedying of it (beyond what the practice of the navy has already provided) but the placing some marks of his Majesty's displeasure upon' the guilty commanders, and for this the king must be informed of particular instances.

Thanks for his advice touching the galley at Genoa ; doubts not but he will be supplied with moneys for defraying the charge of any service he shall do in relation to her when the king shall come to any determination touching the fitting of her forth ; hopes she may be got to sea with less waste of time and treasure than that at Livorne.<sup>1</sup> The king's commanders will be directed to apply themselves to him as he desires. Hopes a course is now in taking which will prevent their concerning themselves on shore so much as hitherto with merchants' affairs, 'the liberty taken by them therein being of late arrived to a degree utterly destructive to the service of his Majesty, both in its honour and success.'

1987. [p. 389.] 12 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Hill, Marseilles. —Thanks for his of the 6th intimating the arrival of the Deptford ketch from Livorne. Captain Anguish's carrying merchants' goods and committing other irregularities has so far given matter of just displeasure to the king that he has sent another to command his ketch [1913, 1916] and ordered him to be brought home to give farther satisfaction, 'myself also being in particular commanded by the king to desire an account from you of all the merchants' goods which he so carried out to Livorne and brought thence, and what the galley also has done of the like kind in his passage to and from your port.'

1988. [p. 389.] 12 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Ball, at Livorne. —Has received his of 22 Oct., and is sorry for the loss of the pink St. Joseph, and the misfortune the Deptford ketch met with [1913]. Desires particulars of the merchants' goods carried by Captain Anguish back to Marseilles [1937], as also of what the galley and Sweepstakes took away with them, 'they being reported, too, to have gone both away loaden with merchants' goods from Livorne.' 'As to the practices of the Spaniards, and particularly in this case of the St. Joseph, in seizing upon English shipping upon pretence of carrying Jews' goods,' the answer from the Governor of Port Langoon<sup>1</sup> will give light in that matter.

1989. [p. 390.] 14 Nov. S. P. to Captain Dickenson,<sup>2</sup> Downs.—Doubts not but the officers of the navy (to whom he says he will write) will give orders for supplying him with cables.

1940. [p. 390.] 14 Nov. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland.<sup>3</sup>—The sending of his sailing instructions hath been respited in expectation every day of hearing of his arrival in the Downs; but as the day is just now at hand by which his convoys by agreement of the magistrates of Yarmouth are to be there, the writer has this night sent them away [1943]. If this find him still in the River, his stay there may prove 'matter of great dislike.'

1941. [p. 390.] 14 Nov. S. P. to Captain Ashby,<sup>1</sup> Rose, Sheerness.—Has received his of the 11th, and is glad of his arrival at Sheerness with the Rose. The king gives him leave for 2 or 3 days, at such time as may be without hindrance to the refitting his ship, in which all possible despatch must be made, since the second fleet of fish-ships [1907] which he is to convoy to the Straits will be ready to sail from the Downs on 1 Dec.

1952. [p. 393.] 18 Nov. *S. <sup>1</sup> The date of Captain William Davies’s commission to the Foresight is given in Pepys’s Register as 3 Dec. 1674 (supra, vol. i. p. 343). The Register mentions another William ‘Davies,’ and two lieutenants with the surname ‘Davis.’

<sup>2</sup> Ships of the first four rates carried a ‘master trumpeter’ and five ‘ordinary trumpeters’ (supra, vol. i. p. 150).

1954. [p. 393.] 18 Nov. S. P. to Captain Perriman,<sup>2</sup> master attendant, Sheerness.—It is a great pity so much time should be lost in getting up and putting out of pay the French Ruby. Would be glad to know whence it ariseth that any of her guns yet remain on board. He is to save time in fitting the Hunter, that the flyboats now fitting to accompany her be not delayed [1953, 1991]. As to what he requests relating to himself, it is true the Katherine yacht is come home again,<sup>3</sup> given as they say by the Prince of Orange to Alderman Backwell,<sup>4</sup> and on his account fitted and sent home, where she now remains so, his Majesty not being concerned in her, nor likely to be. Nevertheless if it should be, the writer will not neglect doing him that or any other good office with the king and lords, his long service and well acquitting himself therein requiring no less.

1955. [p. 394.] 18 Nov. S. P. to Captain Royden,<sup>5</sup> Guernsey, Downs.—The king hath been pleased to call away the Hunter from the Downs [1953]. Encloses orders for him to command in chief there.

1956. [p. 394.] 18 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—The king having, upon the debate on Saturday last with the lords (the board being present), resolved that taking down the pennant is not to be expected from any foreign man-of-war riding in the Downs in sight of the commander-in-chief, these are to put them in mind of considering how far it may be necessary for the ship which shall have command-in-chief there, and which from her quality and the saving of charge shall not be allowed to wear a flag, be appointed to bear some mark of difference, and, if so, what may be proper to be established in that case without exposing the king to the extraordinary charge of a flag.

1957. [p. 394.] 18 Nov. *S. Also a distinct account of the different charge of the sheathing of one ship of each rate the old way, and this new way of lead.

1958. [p. 395.] 18 Nov. S. P. to Captain Gunman, Anne yacht.—To carry the bearer, Mr. Philip Pigear, to Dieppe, and to bring him back into the River if required [1959].

1959. [p. 395.] 18 Nov. S. P. to Madam Gwyn.<sup>1</sup>—Has just now received the honour of her commands, and encloses what she requires of him [1958]. Fears Captain Gunman set sail this morning from Greenwich for Rye, there to receive Sir Henry Fitzjames and having carried him over to Dieppe to attend there till he shall receive further orders from him for his return; so that the only means of securing Mr. Pigear's passage over by this yacht must be by his setting out to-morrow towards Rye. But a more easy opportunity of passage will offer itself within a week or ten days, by the yacht that shall be appointed for fetching over Lord Duras.<sup>2</sup>

the work he with others was last employed on. Will lay his seamen's petition for their wages before the king and lords; in the meantime presumes he will give leave to none of them to come up, and for those who come without leave will see them punished by being pricked upon his books. The navy board have had order some days since for victualling him for 3 months.

1962. [p. 396.] 20 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Will forthwith provide the lords' order for the chirurgeon's mate of the Foresight to serve upon the Vulture. Will inform the king and lords with the ground of the Europa hulk's present bearing of more men at Tangier than was designed for her, hoping that when the occasion thereof shall be removed they will remember to reduce the number. Will acquaint the king and lords with their careful information touching Captain Marshall's<sup>1</sup> unfaithfulness, who though he be discharged the service will hardly escape without some further censure for it than that of making good the victuals of the person unduly borne by him on his ship's books; as also with what they propound touching a privy seal for the sale of the old provisions and stores they mention.

1965. [p. 397.] 21 Nov. S. P. to Captain Royden,<sup>1</sup> Guernsey, Downs.—The king knows not how to judge of the importance of the service of convoying the ships he mentions to Seine Head and St. Valery,<sup>2</sup> as neither his letter nor the list from the Downs gives any particular account of them, but his Majesty does not think it advisable to have the Downs left without some one ship there, or at least so near as that within a day or two there may be one there, which when he is gone cannot be depended upon, in regard the Hunter is to come into the River, the Greyhound is gone to Holland, and the Pearl is not yet quite ready to return to him. He is therefore ordered to remain where he is until the Pearl be with him and he receive further orders.

1966. [p. 397.] 21 Nov. *S. the king's own hand. Prays that if possible a breach may be prevented, though 'his Majesty' hath herewith given you power to proceed to hostility with them, as well upon consideration of the encouragement which these people would have, and those of Tunis and Argeir might reasonably collect, to the adventuring upon the same method of proceedings as those of Tripoli have done in case his Majesty should be found contenting himself with the ratification of the peace without the restitution of the vessels and goods thus unduly seized, as in confidence that if this should happen to find you before you part with the rest of the ships you shall meet with, and thereby appear with any tolerable force before the place, it may bring them to easy terms of compliance, at least to much easier than can be hoped for by leaving them in a quiet possession of what they have already, and what they may further, by a like breach of faith, be encouraged to look out for and may too probably pick up out of the great wealth which his Majesty's subjects the merchants trading into Turkey are said to have at this day floating within that sea.'

1968. [p. 397.] 24 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Encloses a demand received in a letter from Sir Roger Strickland,<sup>1</sup> dated 22 November from the Downs, wherein he gives an account of the damage which several merchant ships have met with by occasion of the late stormy weather, but he met with no further damage than the losing of his long-boat and an anchor, which being supplied, with the other things mentioned in the said demand, except the cable, which he thinks he may make shift without, he will be in a condition to proceed on his voyage. They are to supply him in the speediest manner they can, as he has to sail upon the arrival of the Yarmouth fishermen, who designed to be there yesterday.

1969. [p. 397.] 24 Nov. The same to the same.—On a second reading of Sir R. Strickland's letter [1968], thinks it necessary to send them a transcript of one particular more in it relating to the matter of his old solicitation concerning the want of men: 'I am ashamed of giving you so many troubles concerning my desires of being allowed more men; we were so much puzzled in the late storm that really we found a want of hands. If an increase will not be granted, I humbly beg that cripples,<sup>1</sup> volunteers, midshipmen extraordinary, &c., may be allowed as supernumeraries, that I may entertain so many able seamen more, which will be some help and satisfaction to me. Desires their opinion how far an increase may be necessary [1980, 1989]. Is very apprehensive that the number of volunteers and extra midshipmen (not less than half a score) may take off more of the hands allowed him in time of peace than that complement can spare, but they will know best whether there was any such room left in their establishment for so many unserviceable hands. Hears from Yarmouth that their herring fleet will be ready to sail thence towards the Downs as yesterday.

1970. [p. 400.] 24 Nov. S. P. to the Bailiffs of Yarmouth.—Is sorry for the backwardness of their ships, as the frigate for their convoy hath for some time already lain in full charge to his Majesty in expectation of their coming, as the second frigate will now in a very few days do [1907]. Desires them to hasten away their ships to their rendezvous in the Downs.

1971. [p. 400.] 24 Nov. S. P. to Captain Royden,<sup>2</sup> Guernsey, in the Downs.—Is sorry at the general ill effects of the last storms. Could wish the Hunter were come over. It is reported that one of the king's yachts is lost, but hopes it is only the Merlin, which is safe. Desires to know whether he has any reason to believe any such report, and when the Anne went by the Downs, which sailed out of the River for Rye on Wednesday last [1983].

that have been met with of the caulking heretofore of ships newly come out of his hands, who have presently complained of leakiness, proceeding, I am apt to believe, from the cause you have imputed it to of endeavouring a greater despatch than would consist with the well-doing of the work' [1984]. Is sensible of the inconveniences he must undergo till he has provision made on shore for his quartering, which all in good time the king will be in a condition of treasure to remedy. As to what he mentions to arise from his interfering with the soldiers and officers of the garrison, the navy board will report on it to the lords, but the difficulties will not be removed 'until some establishment be made by which it may be known what shall be esteemed the governor's part and what the officers of the yard to do towards the safe keeping of the king's stores and reasonable refreshment of your workmen there' [1984].

Postscript.—The officers of the navy have taken care that the Ann and Christopher's men shall be assisting to him on all occasions.

1974. [p. 402.] 24 Nov. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland.<sup>1</sup>—Is extremely afflicted at his particular sufferings, and the losses in general among the poor merchantmen from the late storms. Doubts not that the officers of the navy will supply his wants arising therefrom, and his want of men [1968, 1969]. Has this day understood from Yarmouth that their herring ships would be ready to sail thence towards him as yesterday; has advertised the officers of the navy, that no time may be lost in putting him into a condition again of accompanying them [1969].

1975. [p. 402.] 25 Nov. *S. 1977. [p. 403.] 26 Nov. S. P. to the Navy Board.—Returns their last estimate for the business of Surinam [1923], the absence of the treasurer of the navy making it necessary that it should be committed to that officer of his who is entrusted with the solicitation for moneys.

1978. [p. 403.] 26 Nov. S. P. to Mr. Neale, postmaster, Deal.—Thanks him for his care of his letters. Has forborne to pursue the mistake lately committed by him, in confidence that it was from inadvertency and not neglect [1831, 1845].

1980. [p. 403.] 26 Nov. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland,<sup>4</sup> Downs.—Is much surprised at his of the 23rd. Cannot think but that the king may have a liberty allowed him of taking notice of his ship's proceedings without its being thought a matter of provocation, especially in a case where a day hath been long before set, and where, when that day was very near, he remained still in the River in want of so considerable stores as a new foresail and a new main topsail, though 8 days before he gave it under his hand that his wants were only some small stores, as compasses, aprons for the guns, &c., which he hoped to get on board in 3 days. 1984. [p. 405.] 1 Dec. S. P. to Mr. Shish,<sup>4</sup> shipwright, Sheerness.—Has taken notice to the king and lords of the despatch which from time to time he makes in fitting forth the king's ships that come into Sheerness [1973]. Has opened to them the ill-usage the officers of the navy at that place receive from the governor and soldiers of the garrison, and has gotten the full examination thereof referred to the officers of the navy. Meanwhile let all due order and decent respect be paid to the governor [1973, 2020].

1985. [p. 405.] 2 Dec. S. P. to Captain Jenifer.<sup>5</sup>—The king esteems his wearing 'a particular flag different from any of those which [by] his Majesty's ships upon proper occasions are by warrant of the admiral usually worn,' a thing 'extraordinary unjustifiable,' and commands the writer to desire an account from him by what advice or warrant he first took it up and so long continued it. 'True it is out of regard for her Majesty his Majesty is pleased to give me leave to tell you that for preventing any unfit constructions that may be made by the Portuguese of your not being found wearing the flag which you have accustomed them to expect with you, no notice shall be taken to your prejudice here of your putting up and wearing the said flag within the river of Lisbon and there only, provided no other ship of his Majesty's be in sight of you during your so wearing it; but even this he is pleased to think so unjustifiable by the laws and discipline of the seas as that he will not be found so far to encourage it as by giving you permission by any written order.' The king is surprised to find that he has never had any commission to this day, either from the lord high admiral or himself, for the command of his ship [2002], which for any act of hostility he may have done exposes him to be condemned as a pirate. This 'has brought your discretion under very great question both with the king and queen, she having been pleased this night herself to tell me that she did ever think you had the lord high admiral's commission.' A commission<sup>1</sup> is enclosed with the usual printed instructions annexed.

1988. [p. 407.] 3 Dec. S. P. to Captain Davies,<sup>4</sup> Foresight, Downs.—Has received his of the 30 Nov., and is heartily glad of his being safe arrived in the Downs. Encloses the king's warrant for the person he proposes to succeed his boatswain deceased : to take care that he is rightly charged with the goods and remains of stores. The Vulture sloop is on her way towards him, and is to follow his orders.

1989. [p. 407.] 3 Dec. *S. The cripples are not allowed as supernumeraries [1969, 1980], the officers of the navy having heretofore declared that such a limited number to be sent on board the king's ships by their special order might be without inconvenience borne upon the ordinary complement of men.<sup>6</sup> As to the late mistake [1980], 'I shall always

This will in general enable them to find whether all the said commanders have of their own accord taken notice to them of any goods by them laden in the said port [1881].

Propounds the same consideration concerning the latter as already concerning the former [2009], to the end that if Portsmouth is become less convenient for the reception of more ships, the king may be informed, who is unwilling that for the sake either of the merchants or his commanders so great a charge should so unnecessarily be drawn upon him as must attend their being brought about into the River, unless his own service only (and no other consideration) require it [2020].

2021. [p. 419.] 16 Dec. S. P. to Captain Perriman,<sup>1</sup> master attendant, Sheerness.—His coming up is referred to the officers of the navy [2020]. As to the Royal Escape, if he keeps to the terms upon which she was at first designed for him—namely, that she might put his Majesty to no more charge than she would have done in the wet dock—the navy board will doubtless give way to his making all convenient use of her.

Argeir.—The king is very well pleased with the late packet from the government of Argeir, 'as putting him in great quiet in reference to the trouble and charge which an untimely breach with that people might have occasioned' [1766]; and is in particular no less pleased with his behaviour and the method of his procuring him satisfaction. Has not failed to mention his condition both to Mr. Secretary Williamson<sup>1</sup> singly and his Majesty also, with the lords of the council for foreign affairs, 'and though, for reasons relating to the decency of it, I am apt to believe his Majesty will not think it fit to raise your title, that of consul being as much as his Majesty doth give in any port of the Grand Signior's but that of Constantinople, I do nevertheless find his Majesty inclined to favour you in the main point of your allowance and consideration for your expenses in his affairs.'

The king will offer an article in 'compliance with what that people seems so reasonably to insist upon of forbidding his subjects serving or sailing in any foreign ports other than as passengers, who shall bring passes from one known minister or officer of his Majesty's for their persons and necessary baggages, certifying themselves to be such and no other.' Will also take care for having it inserted in the Governor of Tangier's instructions that regard may be had to what he advises about showing all needful respect to the Algerines and their ships as often as they shall come in thither.

The king is pleased with the account he gives of the behaviour of Captain Anguish<sup>2</sup> towards the Sallee man-of-war, and doth not design less than 2 frigates—the Drake and a new 5th rate, the Rose<sup>3</sup> (until 2 new small frigates now building for that express service shall be finished)—for the annoying those of Sallee. If the business at Tripoli is accommodated [1967], and the rupture come to pass which he gives ground for expecting between Argeir and France, and what he further most welcomely adds of the hopes of our traffic being renewed with those of Alexandria, the king and the merchants will be at great ease.

2044. [p. 426.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Captain Booth,<sup>1</sup> Pearl, Downs.—Does not think he has 'any just cause of complaint of Captain Royden's'<sup>2</sup> taking upon him to give convoy to the ships now outwards bound, in regard that the ships he is now designed to convoy have lain long in the Downs waiting for him, and that his Majesty did not think fit to let him go with them until you came thither to relieve him'; yet care will be taken to fix the command in the Downs in some one vessel that may be constantly there.

2045. [p. 426.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Sir Roger Strickland,<sup>3</sup> Downs.—Is glad he gives Mr. Pickering so good a character [2028].

2046. [p. 426.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Mr. St. Michel,<sup>4</sup> Deal.—His last received.

2047. [p. 426.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Captain Jenifer, Saudados,<sup>5</sup> at Cowes, in the Isle of Wight.—Has received his of the 20th from Spithead, and his account of his passengers, 'with which his Majesty and his Royal Highness have given themselves a great deal of good entertainment.' Doubts not but the pleasantness of it is such to himself as will make him amends for all the trouble that accompanies it.

2048. [p. 427.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Captain Wood,<sup>6</sup> Bonadventure, at Portsmouth.—'I have received your letter of the 27th inst. and thank you for so much light as you have given me touching the two French men-of-war that forebore to strike to the king's flag [2033]; intending to supply<sup>1</sup> it if I can from Falmouth as you advise.' To hasten up his journal.

2049. [p. 427.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Captain Baker,<sup>2</sup> Merlin yacht, at Portsmouth.—Will not be backward in doing him any good office, but the king has determined to lay up the Mary yacht, which for many years hath been employed on the coast of Ireland, and to bring her commander and officers into the vacancies which will be made by the removal of Captain Fasby and his officers into the new yacht.

2050. [p. 427.] 28 Dec. S. P. to Captain Taylor,<sup>3</sup> Harwich.—Thanks for his about the men detained in the yacht [2035, 2036, 2038]. The Navy yacht is now at liberty to return [2039].

2051. [p. 427.] 29 Dec. S. P. to the Navy Board.—To supply the Anne yacht with what she wants.

2052. [p. 428.] 31 Dec. S. P. to Mr. Secretary Coventry.<sup>4</sup>—'All that passes the hands of the lord high admiral in cases of letters of marque and reprisal is a warrant to the judge of the admiralty for his making out such letters to the party to whom the same are granted.' Encloses a copy of this warrant, wherein he will find the rules to be observed in the execution of the said letters to be given by the judge of the admiralty according to certain articles signed by the king and lodged with the judge to that purpose.

Postscript.—Has written as he commanded to the Downs about the Katherine [2053].

2058. [p. 428.] 31 Dec. S. P. to Captain Royden.<sup>5</sup>—In case a vessel called the Katherine, some time since taken by a French commission and carried into Dunkirk, from whence she is now cleared, shall not happen to come away thence under the convoy of the Pearl (which he has newly sent over thither), the next ship under his direction that is sent over is to bring her safely to the river of Thames [2052].

Has obtained from the king and lords an order to the officers of the navy to make out a bill to him for his disbursements, whereof Will. Hewer<sup>1</sup> will give him a more particular account.

2055. [p. 428.] 31 Dec. S. P. to Colonel Robinson, vice-admiral of North Wales.—The lords have written to the attorney-general, as he desires, to stop proceedings in the exchequer in the business mentioned in his of the 24th, until they have had opportunity of informing themselves fully touching the same in relation to what concerns the admiral's jurisdiction therein. Desires a particular account of the affair; 'upon which it is not to be doubted but my lords will assert with all due vigour whatever of the jurisdiction of the lord high admiral shall be found interested therein.'
